And Seint Gregory sayth, that precious clothing is culpable for the derthe of it, and for his softnesse, and for his strangenesse and disguising, and for the superfluitee, or for the inordinate scantnesse of it.—Id. The Persones Tale.

For the freshnesse of hir heauenly cheres,
So agreeable was vnto the strangeres,
At hir entree, that in especial,
Hem thought it like a thing celestial.
Id. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

Somtyme caceth as an henne,
Somtyme speketh as don the men,
And right so as hir iargon strangeth,
In sondry wise her forme chaungeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For anone after he was chaunged,
And from his owne kinde stranged,
A lapwynke made he was.—Id. Ib.

And take a chambre oute of sight.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

But by strangers, that is to wit, by heretickes, whiche bee strangers from the houtholde of Christes catholike church, and whiche doe straungely rehearse and strangely declare Christes catholyk scripture, agaynste the known catholike doctrine of Christes known catholike church.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 807.

And in my thought I rol her bewties too and fro,
Her laughing chere, her lovely looke, my hart that persed so.

Her strangenes when I sued her servant for to be,
And what she said, and how she smilde, when that she pitied me.—Surrey. The Faithfull Louer, &c.

And I am something curious, being strange
To haue them in safe stowage: May it please you
To take them in protection.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 7.

By straunge occasion she did him behold,
And much more straungely gan to love his sight,
As it in bookes hath written bene of old.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

The which of many things which in him be straunge, I know will seeme the strangest, and wordes themselves being so auncient, the knitting of them so short and intricate, and the whole period and compasse of speech so delishtom for the roundnesse, and so grave for the strangenesse.
Id. Epistle to Maister Harvey.

Lear. Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leaue her?—Shakespeare. Lear. Act i. sc. 1.

[These] were the assertions of Aristotle, which theology pronounceth impieties. Which yet we need not strange at from one, of whom a father saith, Nec Deum coluit nec curauit.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 19.

Old Egeus only could revive his son,
Who various changes of the world had known,
And strange vicissitudes of human fate,
Still altering, never in a steady state;
Good after ill, and after pain delight;
Alternate like the scenes of day and night.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

There were sundry of the rites of that [the Jewish] church, instituted on purpose to divide and separate the Jews from the Gentiles, to create a distance and mutual strangeness between them; that thereby the Jews might be preserved and secured from mingling with the Gentile idolatries.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

A much stranger thing may be seen in the East-India island of Sombrero, not very far from Sumatra, if we may believe our countryman Sir James Lancaster, who relates it as an eye-witness, for which reason, and for the strangeness of the thing, I shall add the story in his own words.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 60.

That part that fronts the gate, has a pretty neat room, which seems to be designed for the reception of strangers.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

The dream of Sir Walter Raleigh, concerning the golden city and country of El Dorado, may satisfy us, that even wise men are not always exempt from such strange delusions.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

Such was the priest, so strangely wise!
He could not bow—how should he rise?
Learned he was, and deeply read;
—But what of that?—not duly bred.
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle to J. B. Esq.

"Though the common experience (says he) and the ordinary course of things have justly a mighty influence on the minds of men, to make them give or refuse credit to any thing proposed to their belief, yet there is one case, wherein the strangeness of the facts lessens not the assent to a fair testimony given of it.—Warburton, vol. x. Disc. 29.

Fearing to run, in thick weather, into a place to which we were all strangers, and seeing some breakers and broken ground a-head, I tacked in twenty-five fathom water.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 3.

'Tis good the fainting soul to cheer,
To see the famish'd stranger fed;
To milk for him the mother-deer,

Oh. Alas, it is the basenesse of thy feare,
That makes thee strangle thy propriety.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act v. sc. 1.

But you shall finde the band that seemes to tye their friendship together, will bee the very strangler of their amity.—Id. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 6.

Sideritis hath a peculiar vertue for to cure swine of their squinsies or strangles.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 15.

Castoreum taken inwardly in honeyed wine, is singular to helpe forward womens purgation: the same beeing held to their nostrills with vinegre and pitch to smell unto; or put up beneath in manner of a suppositorie, after it is reduced into the forme of trochisques, helpeth them when by rising of the mother they are in daunger of strangulation.
Id. Ib. b. xxxii. c. 10.

My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life.
Job, vii. 15.

If this be the way to reconcile us to their communion, have we not great reason to be fond of returning into the bosom of such a church which may strangle us as soon as it gets us within her arms?—Stillfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

'Tis Providence alone secures
In ev'ry change both mine and yours:
Safety consists not in escape
From dangers in a frightful shape;
An earthquake may be bid to spare
The man that's strangled by a hare.—Cowper. A Fable.

STRAP, v. } A. S. Stropp; Dut. and Ger.
STRAP, n. } Strop; Sw. Stroppar. The It.
STRAPPLE, v. } Ströppa is a twigg, a with, to binde vines or hops with. Stroppare,—to bind with twigs or oziers (Florio); and hence evidently strapple, in Chapman.

Our northern lexicographers explain the northern words to denote—a thong, band; a rope; a rope with a noose; but agree that, with the Italian, they come from the Lat. Stroppus, or strophium; Gr. στροφιον, a wreath or garland, from στρεφ-ειν, vertere, torquere.

Our word strap seems to be allied to strip or stripe; a strap being commonly applied to—

A stripe of any material, of leather, linen, &c. used to bind, to fold round, to fasten, or hold together.

These cloathes are good enough to drinke in, and so bee these boots too: and they be not, let them hang themselves in their owne straps.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 3.

— Hermes, (to shew how He did those deedes) did forthwith cut and bow
Strong osiers in soft folds; and strapp'd strait
One of his hugest oxen.

Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Hermes.

He comes the herald of a noisy world,
With spatter'd boots, strapp'd waist, and frozen locks;
News from all nations lumb'ring at his back.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

The shape of this instrument is not unlike a square razor strop.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 18.

STRATAGEMICAL. } tagemma; Sp. Estratagema;
Lat. Stratagema; Gr. στρατηγία, from στρατηγ-ειν, to lead an army; (στρατος,—αγειν.)

Something done in leading or commanding an army, in war, (sc.) to ensure an advantage by deceiving the enemy: hence, generally,—

A delusion, a deception, a trick, an artifice; an artful plan or contrivance, skilful manœuvre, effectual movement.

Palladius, by some experience, but especially by reading histories, was acquainted with stratagems.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

I should either cast down mine armour, and hide my selfe like a recreant, or els (of a malicious stubbornness) should busie my braines with some stratagem for to execute an envious reuenge vpon mine aduersaries.
Gascoigne. Steele Glas.

Th' enemy thought
Something would by the Israelites be wrought
They had not heard of, and they long'd to see What strange or warlike stratagem 't should be.
Drayton. David & Goliath.

Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? eu'ry minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

But now the fam'd Sicilian pirates, skill'd
In arts and warfare of the liquid field,
Their wonted wiles and stratagems provide,
To aid their great acknowledg'd victor's side.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

His wife, to gain entirely his affections, sent him this stratagemical epistle.
Swift. Tripos—assigned to him by Dr. Barret.

I always consider his [the Spectator] making them and their dress so frequently the subject of his lucubrations, an innocent stratagem to draw their attention to his book, and thus to allure them to the noblest speculations on subjects moral and divine.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 10.

STRATIFY, v. } A word used in chymistry, STRATIFICATION. } geology: from Stratum, a bed, a layer.

To lay, or cause to lie—in beds.

Some sages say, that, where the numerous wave
For ever lashes the resounding shore,
Drill'd through the sandy stratum, every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise.
Thomson. Autumn.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping “Nece, all thing hath time I dare avow,

For whan a chambre a fire is on a hall,
Well more nede is, it sodainly rescow,
Than to disputen and aske amonges all,
How the candle in the strawe is fall.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

In stede of meate, gras and streys,
In stede of handes, longe cleyes,
In stede of man, a beaste like
He sawe, and then he gan to sike.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Though a man had a precious iuell & a rich, yet if hee wiste not the value therof, nor wherfore it serued, he were neither the better nor richer of a straw.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 3.

And so thyder he rode to dyner, and so alyghted there and went into his chambre, the whiche was strawed with grene herbes, and the walles sette full of grene bowes, to make the chambre more fressh.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 180.

Then he whiche had receaued the one talente came, and sayde: master, I considered that thou waste an harde man, which repest where thou strawedst not, and was therefore afrayde, & wente and hid thy talente in the erth: beholde, Vncertaine Auctors. An old Louer to a Yong Gentlewoman.

Thus, the first strawberries he could find, were ever in a clean washt dish, sent to Kala.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

And were some say, the ashes of his body were after his death strawed abroad through the Isle of Salamina: that seemeth to be but a fable, and altogether untrue.
Sir T. North. Plutarch, p. 81.

Lik'st a strawne scare-crow in the new-sowne field,
Reard on some sticke, the tender corne to shield.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 7.

The dull-ey'd Evening his moist vapours threw,
Strewing the still earth with sweet showers of dew.
Drayton. The Owl.

Scarse could he footing find in that fowle way,
For many corses, like a great lay-stall,
Of murthered men, which therein strowed lay
Without remorse or decent funerall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

Vio. Methinks she talks well, and shews a great deal of huswivry, pray let me deck the chambers, shall I?
Nan. Yes, you shall, but do not scorn to be advis'd sister, for there belongs more to that, than you are aware on; why should you venture so fondly upon the strowings?
Beaum. & Fleich. The Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 1.

As for us here in Italie, even as our manner was in old time to lie and sleep upon straw-beds & chaffey-couches, so at this day we use to call our pallets still by the name of Stramenta.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

One day, as they all three together went
To the greene wood to gather strawberries,
There chaunst to them a dangerous accident.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

Bel. Heere's a few floures, but 'bout midnight more:
The hearbes that haue on them cold dew o' th' night
Are strewings fit't for graues; vpon their faces.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 4.

For charitable praier, Shardes, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her:
Yet heere she is allowed her virgin rites,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and buriall.
Id. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

With olives ever green the ground is strow'd,
And grapes ungather'd shed their generous blood.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

In a field of ripe corn blown upon by the wind, there will appear as it were waves of a colour (at least gradually) differing from that of the rest of the field; the wind, by depressing some of the ears, and not at the same time others, making the one reflect more from the lateral and strawy parts than do the rest.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 678.

First he bids spread
Dry fern or litter'd hay, that may imbibe
Th' ascending damps; then leisurely impose,
And lightly, shaking it with agile hand
From the full fork, the saturated straw.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

Unlike, O much unlike, the strawy shed,
Where Mary, queen of Heaven, in humbless lay,
Where erst the infant God repos'd his head,
And deign'd to dwell in tenement of clay.
Thompson. The Nativity.

It was reckoned a piece of magnificence in Thomas Becket, that he strewed the floor of his hall with clean hay or rushes in the season, in order that the knights and squiers, who could not get seats, might not spoil their fine cloathes when they sat down on the floor to eat their dinner.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 4.

But while in vain to loose his bands he try'd,
He shook the myrtle where his reins were ty'd;
Shook with such force, as made the leaves around
Fall from the boughs, and strow in heaps the ground.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. vi.

stray, for entering his fee-simple without leaue.
Id. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 10.

The axel-trees on which heaven's round doth move,
Shrunke from their burden, both fall broken down;
Those which to pilots point out from above,
Their wayes through waves to riches or renowne,
And so (though fix'd) the strayers helpers prove,
Night's stately lampes borne in an azure crowne.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The Third Houre.

Do you see thousand little motes and atoms wandring up and down in a sun-beam? It is God that so peoples it; and he guides their innumerable and irregular strayings.
Bp. Hopkins. Expos. & Disc. p. 267.

But when the swarms are eager of their play,
And loath their empty hives, and idly stray,
Restrain the wanton fugitives, and take
A timely care to bring the truants back.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Philosophy, that does not dream or stray,
Walks arm in arm with Nature all his way.
Cowper. Charity.

We are assured that the Divine mercy interests itself in the conversion of every individual sinner, just as the owner of a large flock is solicitous for the recovery of a single stray.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 14.

These as a line thir long dimension drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

But say what mean those colour'd streaks in heaven,
Distended as the brow of God appeas'd,
Or serve they as a flourie verge to binde
The fluid skirts of that same watric cloud,
Least it againe dissovle and shour the earth?
Id. Ib. b. xi.

His burning eyen, whom bloody strakes did staine,
Stared full wide, and threw forth sparkes of fyre.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

'Tis like the murmuring of a stream, which not varying in the fall, causes at first attention, at last drowsiness.

Dryden. An Essay of Dramatic Poesie.

While thus she wanton'd, now beneath the wave
But ill conceal'd; and now with streaming locks
That half embrac'd her in a humid veil,
Rising again, the latent Damon drew
Such maddening draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while o'erwhelm'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring.

Thomson. Summer.

Her flag aloft spread ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

And hence the streamlets seek the terrace' shade
Within, without, alike to all convey'd.

Savage. The Wanderer, c. 1.

Hither the nightly-wakeful swain,
That guards his folds upon the plain,
Oft turns his gazing eyes,
Yet marks no stars, but o'er his head
Beholds the streamy twilight spread Like distant morning in the skies.—Hughes. The Ecstasy.

VOL. II.

Streams never flow in vain; where streams abound,
How laughs the land with various plenty crown'd!

Cowper. A Comparison.

These streamers of Omai were a mixture of English, French, Spanish, and Dutch, which were all the European colour that he had seen.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 4.

The monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
Then into the night he looked forth;

And red and bright the streamers light
Were dancing in the glowing north.

He knew, by the streamers, that shot so bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.

Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 2.

Salutary plants grow luxuriantly, with little labour of the plough and harrow, in a rich loam, warmed with a genial sunshine, and duly irrigated by the streamlet in the valley.

Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

STREET. A. S. Strat, stret, platea, vicus,

Go out quickly into ye stretes and quarters of the cytie, and brynge in hyther the poore and the maymed and the halt and the blynde.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And after that made hir offrende,
And to the prestes yftes great
She yafe, and homeward by the strete
The duke hir mette.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For while I ran by the most secret stretes
Eschuing still the common haunted track,
From me catif, alas, bereued was Creusa then my spouse, I wote not how.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

And here this famous fatal place again
Is made the stage of blood—again these streets
Embru'd with slaughter, cover'd with the slain,
Witness what desprate wrath with rancour meets.

Daniel. History of the Civil War, b. vii.

Man. I have attempted one by one the lords Either at home, or through the high street passing,
With supplication prone and fathers tears
To accept of ransome for my son thir pris'ner.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Through winter streets to steer your course aright
How to walk clear by day, and safe by night;
How jostling crowds with prudence to decline,
When to assert the wall, and when resign,

I sing. Gay. Trivia, b. i.

STRENGTH, n. } See STRONG. A. S.
STRENGTH, v. } Strengthe: "that (says

STRE'NGTHENER. } or maketh strong. A. S.
STRE'NGTHENING, n. } Strang-ian, valere, pre-STRE'NGTHLESS. } valere, to have or cause to have.

Ability to act or do, to bear or suffer; force, power, vigour, energy; firmness, stability; firm support, assurance or security; assured, or secure foundation.

Strengths, — strong or fortified places; fortresses.

The verb to Strengthen, is not uncommon in old writers. We write to strengthen; i. e. to join, add, or give strength.

For nother gyn, ny monne's strengthe, yt thynketh, ne mygte yt do.

R. Gloucester, p. 7.

Hii bygonne her heye tounes strengthy vaste aboute,
Her castles and storys, that hii mygte be ynne in doute.

Id. p. 181.

Vor he was a strong man & hardy, the strengoste of ya londe.

R. Gloucester, p. 184.

— To bete adon strengthes.

Piers Plouhman, p. 51.

Conscience commaunded the alle crystyne to delve
And make a muchte mot. that myghte be a strengthe
To holpe holy church.

Id. p. 385.

He answerde and seide, thou schalt loue thi Lord God of alle thin herte: and of alle thi soule and of alle thy strengthis.

Wiclif. Luk, c. 10.

And he answered and sayd: Loue the Lord God, with al thy hert, and w^t al thy soule, and wyth al thy strengthe.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

I woll thou vnderstande these matters, to been saied of thy self, in disprouyng of thy firste seruice, and in strength-yng of thilk that thou hast vndertake.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

And he that may have the lordshipe of his owen herte, is more to preise than he that by force or strengthe taketh gret citees.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

Fortune, whiche maie euery threde
To breke and knitte of mans spede
Shope, as this knight rode in a pase
That he by strength taken was.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Thus was she strengthened for to stonde.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

His body was viii foote long, and his armes and leggyes well lengthed and strengthened after the proporcion of ye body.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 156.

This kynge caste doune dyuerse castells, yt before in the tyme of kyng Stephan, were buylded, other for displeasure of ye owners, or ellys for fere they shulde be strengthened agayn hym.—Id. Ib. c. 236.

And yet neither that woord [wyllinglye] of it selfe, nor strengthened wyth all these other, can make but a bare fourme of arguynge if it were in a nother matter.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 860.

Our holye mother the church thorowout all the world scattered farre and long, in her true head Christ Jesus taught, hath learned not to feare the cōtumelies of the crosse, nor yet of deathe, but more and more is shee strengthened, not in resisting but in sufferynge.—Id. Ib. p. 756.

More huge in strength then wise in workes he was.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Yet must I not part so with mine own strengths,
But borrow, from my modesty, boldness, to Enquire by whose authority you sit
My judges.—Massinger. The Renegado, Act iv. sc. 2.

These bowmen drew a great strength and had strong bowes, which sent the arrows from them with a wonderfull force.—North. Plutarch, p. 477.

We have by thee far more than thine own worth,
That doth encourage, strengthen, and relieve
Our hopes in the succession of thy blood,
That like to thee, they likewise will be good.

Daniel. A Panegyric to the King.

Their meditation is without spiritual advantages, and is not the commencement and strengthening of holy purposes.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 13.

Bal. Heavens cold and ling'ring spirit to punish sin,
And humane blood so fiery to commit it,
One so outgoes the other, it will never Be turn'd to fit obedience.

Aub. Burst it then
With his full swing given, where it brooks no bound,
Complaints of it are vain; and all that rests
To be our refuge (since our powers are strengthless)
Is to conform our wills to suffer freely.

Beaumont & Fletcher. The Bloody Brother, Act iii. sc. 1.

— He his right shoulder strooke,
Where twixt his necke and breast, the loynt, his native
closure tooke:

The wound was wondrous full of death, his string in sunder flees;

His nummed hand fell strengthlesse downe, and he upon his knees.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

The sire of gods, confirming Thetis' prayer,
The Grecian ardour quench'd in deep despair;
But lifts to glory Troy's prevailing bands
Swells all their hearts, and strengthens all their hands.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

Garlic is of great vertue in all colics, a great strengthen of the stomach upon decays of appetite or indigestion, and I believe is (if at least there be any such) a specific remedy of the gout.—Sir W. Temple. Of Health & Long Life.

They make of the poisonous juice of the same root a not unpleasant nor strengthless drink, which divers, even of the English, compare with our beer.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 486.

The mischief his [Hobbs] writings had done to religion set Cudworth upon projecting its defence. Of this he published one immortal volume; with a boldness uncommon indeed, but very becoming a man conscious of his own integrity and strength.—Warburton. The Divine Legation, Pref.

11 A

A considerable number of thwarts were laid from gunwale to gunwale, to which they were securely lashed on each side, as a strengthening to the boat.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 10.

STRENUOUS. } It. Strènuo; Sp. Estrenuo; STRENUOUSLY. } Lat. Strenuus; Gr. Στρηνός, fortis, (Vossius.)

Boldly, perseveringly, active; zealously urgent, or laborious; earnest, ardent, energetic, vigorous.

And then he hasted to the slaine, cast off a shining dart;
And tooke one Podes, that was heire to old Eetion,
A rich man, and a strenuous.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

But what more oft in nations grown corrupt,
And their vices brought to servitude,
Than to love bondage more than liberty,
Bondage with ease then strenuous liberty.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

For though there be many found that can use both, yet will there divers remain that can strenuously make use of neither.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

No sooner had he ended, than they expressed their approbation, according to naval custom, by three strenuous cheers.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 8.

I know how much it concerns you to contend for the application of this text to God the Father; and therefore it is that you plead so strenuously for it.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 227.

It is commonly said, and sometimes strenuously insisted, as a circumstance in which the ethic of all religions falls short of the Christian, that the precept of universal benevolence, embracing all mankind, without distinction of party, sect, or nation, had never been heard of till it was inculcated by our Saviour.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 12.

STRE/PENT. } See OBSTREPEROUS. Fr. Stré- STRE/PEROUS. } pité; It. Strepitoso; from the Lat. Streperè, to make a noise.

Noisy, clamorous.

And though Porta conceive, because in a streperous eruption, it riseth against fire, it doth therefore resist lightning, yet is that no emboldning illation.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

— Peace to the strepent horn!

Let no harsh dissonance disturb the morn,
No sounds inelegant and rude
Her sacred solitudes profane!
Unless her candour not exclude
The lowly shepherd's votive strain.

Shenstone. Ode on Rural Elegance.

STRESS, n. } See DISTRESS. Fr. Destresse.
STRESS'D. } is a strait, narrow, pinch, hard terms, (Cotgrave.) In the example from Spenser, stressed, stress, are manifestly equivalent to distressed, distress; and in the other examples the application is to—

Pressure, or constraint; the point of pressure; weight of pressure; constraining force.

Constantyn he reymed, & did vnto stresse, & wan the lond ilk dele.—R. Brunne, p. 29.

Sithen was no man, that so fer mad stresse.—Id. p. 321.

Because they shoote with a softe louse, and stresses not a shafte much in the breste, where the weight of the bowe lyeth.—Ascham. Toxophilus, b. ii.

The single twyned cordes may no such stresse indure,
As cables brayded thre-fould may, together wretched sure.

Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 4.

Who, stird with pitty of the stressed plight
Of this sad realme, cut into sondry shayres
But such as claymd themselves Brutes rightfull hayres, Gathered the princes of the people loose
To taken counsell of their common cares.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

With this sad hersall of his heavy stresse
The warlike damzell was empassiond sore,
And sayd: "Sir Knight, your cause is nothing lesse
Then is your sorrow certes, if not more."—Id. Id. b. iii. c. 11.

Which passage of Porphyrius concerning Chæremon, we confess Eusebius lays great stress upon, endeavouring to make advantage of it.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 317.

They judge very rightly in the general, that a stress ought not to be laid upon uncertainties, upon things precarious and conjectural, which cannot be proved to the satisfaction of the common reason of mankind.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 3. Introd.

In short, so much stress should never be laid on faith, or any other motive of action, as to exclude other motives.

Gilpin. Hints for Sermons, vol. i. § 24.

STRETCH, v. } Past part. Straight, straught, STRETCH, n. } (qv.) Dut. Strechen; Ger.
STRE'TCHER. } Strecken; Sw. Stræckia; A. S.
STRE'TCHING, n. } Strec-an, astreccan, tendere, extendere, protendere, porrigere,—

To reach, to pull out, to extend; to pull out in length, to lengthen, to strain, to exert.

Whanne I was with you ech day in the temple ye streighten not out hondis into me, but this is youre our and the power of derknessis.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 22.

When I was daylye with you in the temple, ye stretched not forth handes agaynste me. But thys is even youre very houre, and the power of darcknes.—Bible, 1551. Id.

But to Israel he seith, al dai I streighte out myne hondis to a peple that bileuyde not but aghenseide me.

Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 10.

And agaynste Israel he sayeth; all daye longe haue I stretched forthe my handes vnto a peple that beleueth not, but speaketh agaynste me.—Bible, 1551. Id.

And I astonyed had yet streyght mine cares, that is to saine, to herken the bet what she shuld say.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

High labour, and ful gret apparailing
Was at the service of that fire making,
That with his grene top the heven raught,
And twenty fadem of brede the arnes straught.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2915.

— Asie, Affrike, Europe,
The whiche vnder the heuen cope
Begripeth all this earth rounde,
As ferre as stretcheth any grounde.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And hundred hugie great temples he built
In his farre stretching realmes to Jupiter.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

With feeble hands then stretched forth on hye,
As heven accusing guilty of her death,
And with dry drops congealed in her eye,
In these sad wordes she spent her utmost breath.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

— Would he were the master
But of the spirit, to meet him in the field,
He soon should find that our immortal squadrons,
That with full numbers ever are supply'd,
(Could it be possible they should decay)
Dare front his boldest troops, and scatter him,
As an high touring falcon on her stretches,
Severs the fearful fowl.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Prophetess, Act iv. sc. 4.

Thus shew'd his words doubt, yet his hopes enstild
His strength, the stretcher of Vlysses string,
And his steeles piercer.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

And shal breake into Judah, and shal ouerflowe and passe through, and shal come vp to the necke, and the stretching out of his wings shal fil ye breadth of thy lande.

Bible, 1583. Isaiah, viii. 8.

Our host expell'd, what farther force can stay
The victor troops from universal way?
Then will they stretch their power athwart the land;
And either side from sea to sea command.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. viii.

Now one and all, they tug amain; they row
At the full stretch, and shake the brazen prow.
The sea beneath them sinks; their labouring sides
Are swell'd, and sweat runs guttering down in tides.

Id. Id. b. v.

This fiery speech inflames his fearful friends,
They tug at every oar, and every stretcher bends.—Id. Id.

— His slanting ray
Slides ineffectual down the snowy vale,
And, tingling all with his own rosy hue,
From ev'ry herb and ev'ry spiry blade
Stretches a length of shadow o'er the field.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

STREW. See STRAW.

STR/ATE. } Lat. Striatus, from striæ, lines,
STR/ATED. } furrows or channels; Fr. Strie.
STR/ATURE. } Chamfered, channelled, made full of gutters or holes, (Cotgrave.)

Some in this present age, pretending to assert a God, do notwithstanding discard all mental and final causality, from having any thing to do with the fabrick of the world; and resolve all into material necessity, and mechanism; into vortices, globuli and striate particles, and the like.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 383.

These effluvioms do flye by striated atomes and winding particles as Renatus des Cartes conceiveth.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

Parts of tuberos hæmatitæ shew several varieties in the crusts, striature, and texture of the body.—Woodward.

STRICH. Lat. Strix; Gr. Στρίγξ. "As for the ill-favoured scrutthowles, called stryges, I thinke they be but tales that goe of them," (Holland, Plinie, b. xi. c. 39.)

The hoarse-night-raven, trump of dolefull dreere;
The lether winged batt, day's enemy,
The ruefull strich, still waiting on the bere.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

STRICT, adj. } Fr. Estroict; It. Strètto;
STR/ICTLY. } Sp. Estrecho; Lat. Strictus, STR/ICTNESS. } past part. of stringere, to STR/ICTURE. } strain.

Strained or brought close or tight together; tightened, closed; confined, contracted, narrowed; confined to rules or laws; carefully regular, accurate, exact, rigorous or rigid.

Stricture, (met.)—careful or accurate remark, critical remarks or observations; marks or signs.

Acquaint her with the danger of my state,
Implore her in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputie.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 3.

— I haue spoke thus much
To mittigate the iustice of thy plea:
Which if thou follow, this strict course of Venice
Must needes giue sentence 'gainst the Merchant there.

Id. The Merchant of Venice, Act iv. sc. 1.

Lieu. Right well, deare Madame: by your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them,
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Id. Richard III. Act iv. sc. 1.

But while they talk as if they did not need to live strictly, many of them live so strictly as if they did not believe so foolishly.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

The interests of men are a violent and preternatural declination from the strictnesses of virtue.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 25.

Evad. Alas Amintor, thinkst thou I forbear
To sleep with thee, because I have put on A maiden's strictness?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act ii.

I haue deliuered to Lord Angelo
(A man of stricture and firme abstinence)
My absolute power, and place here in Vienna.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 4.

The God of nature implanted in their vegetable natures certain passive strictures, or signatures of that wisdom which hath made and ordered all things with the highest reason.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 46.

Beyond the which I find a narrow going or strictland leading frō the point to Hirst castell which standeth into the sea.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 12.

I chose to take in, for the present, rather several that perhaps did not in strictness belong to the Christian virtuoso, than throw by any that did.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 748.

If prescience can determine actions so
That we must do, because he did foreknow,
Or that, foreknowing, yet our choice is free,
Not forc'd to sin by strict necessity;
This strict necessity they simple call,
Another sort there is—conditional.

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Though some part of them [its imperfections] are covered in the verse (as Erichonius rode always in a chariot to hide his lameness), such of them as cannot be concealed you will please to connive at, though, in the strictness of your judgment, you cannot pardon.—Id. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

We greatly deceive ourselves, therefore, if we imagine, that God requires greater strictness of life at one time than at another; much less that, on the score of a little mortification at one season of the year, we may spend the rest of it more laxly.—Gilpin, vol. ii. Ser. 32.

But to what purpose are these strictures? To a great and good one. They tend to show the expediency of increasing the personal merit of individuals, and consequently the merit of the aggregate.—Knox. Liberal Education, Conclus.

STRIDE, v. } A. S. Stridan, streed-an, to STRIDE, n. } spread, (to tread widely.)

To spread abroad; to separate, to stretch or reach asunder: generally applied to the legs.

Where discipline shall be but deemed wayne,
Where blockes are stride by stumblers at a strawe,
And where selfe will must stande for martiall lawe.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Some will geve two or three strydes forward, daunsing, and hoppinge after his shaft, as long as it flyeth, as though he were a madde man.—Ascham. Toxophilus, b. ii.

The gate was open; but therein did wayt
A sturdie villein, stryding stiffe and bold,
As if the highest God defy he would.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

They passing forth kept on their readie way,
With easie steps so soft as foot could stryde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

At last him to a little dore he brought,
That to the gate of hell, which gaped wide,
Was next adioyning, ne them parted ought;
Betwixt them both was but a little stride,
That did the house of riches from hell-mouth divide.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 7.

Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast
With horrid strides, hell trembled as he strode.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Lady. So, what saddle have I?
Pris. Monsieur Laroon's the Frenchman's.
Lady. That agen,
You know so well it is not for my stride,
How oft have I complain'd on't?
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act ii. sc. 1.

The giant hearken'd to the dashing sound;
But when our vessels out of reach he found,
He strided onward; and in vain essay'd
Th' Æonian deep, and durst no farther wade.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iii.

Fame, the swift ill, increasing as she roll'd,
Disease, despair, and death, at three reprises told:
At three insulting strides she stalk'd the town,
And, like contagion, struck the loyal down.
Id. Britannia Rediviva.

O what is he, his ghastly form
So half obscur'd in cloud and storm,
Swift striding on?—beneath his strides
Proud Empire's firmest base subsides;
Behind him dreary wastes remain,
Oblivion's dark chaotic reign!
Scott, Ode 27.

God never meant that man should scale the heav'ns
By strides of human wisdom, in his works,
Though wondrous: he commands us in his word
To seek him rather, where his mercy shines.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

STRIDOUR. } It. Stridore, stridulo; Fr.
STRIDULOUS. } Strident, crashing, clashing, creaking; Lat. Stridor, (from the sound—Scali- ger.)

A shrill, hoarse, creaking sound or noise.

But where they were grave and wise counsellors, to make them garrulous, as grasshoppers are stridulous; that application holdeth not in these old men, though some old men are so.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iii. Comment.

The church then is a dove. Not an envious partridge, not a careless ostrich, not a stridulous jay, not a petulant sparrow, &c.—Bp. Hall. Beauty & Unity of the Church.

Iuturna from afar beheld her fly
And knew th' ill omen, by her screaming cry,
And stridour of her wings.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xii.

STRIFE. See STRIVE.

STRIGMENT. Lat. Strigmentum, from stric- tum, past part. of stringere.

The scrapings (sc.) of dirt, filth, excrement.

Brassavolus and many other;—beside the strigments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, acknowledge that nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

To strike is used, consequentially, from that which (the tool, instrument, which) is used, (sc.) with a whip; to lash,—with a stamping tool; to stamp, to mint, to forge,—with the hammer of a clock, &c. &c.

Met.—To cause or produce quick and lively sensations or emotions; quick, sudden effects.

To strike sail,—to strike it down, or the support of it; to lower it; to strike a bargain, (met.) to conclude, to confirm (fædus ferire, from the ceremony observed of striking a victim.)

Strike, n.—a corn strike, with which the surface of the measure was struck or scraped level with the brim; hence applied to the measure itself.

The Corineus was alles wroth, so grete strokes he gaf,
That the body of eche that he smot or the hed he to clef.
R. Gloucester, p. 17.

R. tille him ran, a stroke on him he fest,
He smot him on the helm, bakward he bare his stroupe.

And, with his ax, repeated strokes bestows
On the strong doors: then all their shoulders ply, Till from the posts the brazen hinges fly.
Id. Virgil. Æneis, b. ii.

Therefore a stroke or blow in such a court of justice whether blood be drawn or not, or even assaulting a judge sitting in the court, by drawing a weapon, without any blow struck, is punishable with the loss of the right hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels,
and of the profits of his lands during life.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 9.

This gentleman was distinguished by an ornament of a very striking appearance: it was the bone of a bird, nearly as thick as a man's finger, and five or six inches long, which he had thrust into a hole, made in the gristle that divides the nostrils.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 4.

In this respect also, the superiority of the present age over the past is strikingly conspicuous.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 70.

— I admire,
None more admires, the painter's magic skill,
Who shows me that which I shall never see,
Conveys a distant country into mine,
And throws Italian light on English walls:
But imitative strokes can do no more

Cowper. Task, b. i.

STRING, v. } Dut. Stringhe, stringhen; Ger.
STRING, n. } Strang, strengen; Sw. Streng.
STRINGER. } Junius derives from the Gr.
STRINGLESS. } στραγγος, tortus. Skinner, STRINGY. } from the Lat. Stringere;—both overpassing the A. S. Strang-ian, valere, prevalere; to enable, to empower, to give ability or power.

To string is,—to give power, force, vigour, energy; as, to string the nerves; to knit closely,
compactly; to fasten closely, tightly; to tie.

And a string,—that which ties or fastens, binds, contracts;—a cord, rope, thread, used for tying or fastening;—a file, a succession, a series, as of things filed, or strung or fastened together by or upon a string.

To string is also,—to do any thing with or to—strings; put them to any thing; put them in order; put any thing upon them.

To have two strings to his bow,—see the second quotation from Ascham.

Of instruments of strings in accord
Heard I so play, a ravishing sweetness,
That God, that maker is of all and Lorde,
Ne heard never better, as I gesse.
Chaucer. The Assembly of Fowles.

I am sure that good wittes, excepte they be let downe lyke a treble stringe, and unbente lyke a good casting bowe, they will never last and be able to continue in studye.
Ascham. Toxophilus, b. i.

In warre, if a stringe breake the man is lost, and is no man, for his weapon is gone, and although he have two strings put on at once, yet he shall have small leasure and lesse roume to bende his bowe, therefore God send us good stringers both for warre and peace.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

When such music sweet
Their hearts and ears did greet,
As never was by mortal finger strook,
Divinely-warbled voice
Answering the stringed noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took.
Milton. Odes.

The Lord was ready to save me; therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments, all the dayes of our life in the house of the Lord.—Bible. Isa. xviii. 20.

The golden offspring of Latona pure,
And ornament of great Joves progenie,
Phœbus, shall be the author of my song,
Playing on ivory harp with silver strong.
Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

For Orpheus' lute was strung with poet's sinews.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 2.

And as these stars were but so many beads Strung on one string, speed undistinguish'd leads Her through those spheres, as through those beads string,
Whose quick succession makes it still one thing.
Donne. On the Progress of the Soul.

After a storme so spreadeth forth the sun
His raies, and bindes the clouds in golden strings,
Or in the stilnesse of a moone-shine eauen,
A falling star so glideth downe from heauen.
Faifax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. ix. s. 62.

Wife. A wholesome tyrant,
Hath been an old stringer in his days,
I warrant him.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act i.

Rich. What sayes he?
Nor. Say nothing, all is said;
His tongue is now a stringlesse instrument,
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

Or that the heat the gaping ground constrains,
New knits the surface, and new strings the veins.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

In time he vaunts among his youthful peers,
Strong-bon'd, and strung with nerves, in pride of years.
Id. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

The blueish veins their trembling pulse disclos'd
The stringy nerves lay naked, and expos'd.
Crowall. Ovid. Metam. b. vi.

A long sea-coast, [Croatia] indented with capacious har-bours, covered with a string of islands, and almost in sight of the Italian shores, disposed both the natives and strangers to the practice of navigation.
Gibbon. Decline & Fall, c. 55.

This loss of teeth is, I think, by all who have written upon the subject, imputed to the tough and stringy coat of the areca nut; but I impute it wholly to the lime.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

STRINGENT. } See CONSTRINGE. It.
STRINGENTLY. } Stringente; Lat. Stringens, pres. part. of stringere, to press.
Pressing, compressing, contracting.

But I have dwelt too long upon this theory; wee'l betake our selves to what follows, and what is more unexceptionably stringent and forcing.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 7.

That the former part is false I shall now demonstrate, by proving most stringently, that no matter whatsoever is capable of such sense and perception as we are conscious to our selves of.—Id. The Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 2.

 sample of such other.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 901.

He is but an yonglyng
 A tall worthy stripling.

Skelton. Why come ye not to Court?

When that at length the stripling saw in sight
 No creature there, but all were out of place,
 Hee shifts his robes and to the ruer ran,
 And there to bath him bare the boy began.

Turberville. The Louer wisheth to be conioynted, &c.

So, as she bad, that witch they disaraid,
 And robd of roiall robes, and purple pall,
 And ornaments that richly were displaid;
 Ne spared they to strip her naked all.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

— If ever I shall heare
 This madnesse from thy mouth againe, let not Vlysses

This head, nor be the father call'd, of yong Telemachus;
 If to thy nakednesse, I take, and strip thee not, and thus Whip thee to fleet from Councell.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

When a plum'd fanne may shade thy chalked face,
 And lawny strips thy naked bosom grace.

Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 4.

A mad man, or that feigned mad to bee,
 Drew by the heare along upon the grownd
 A handsom stripling with great crueltee,
 Whom sore he bett, and gor'd with many a wovnd,
 That cheekes with teares, and sydes with blood, did all abownd.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

In Mula is a faire spring two miles from the sea, from whence runneth a little brooke or strippet.

Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 10.

— Thou best Anana, thou the pride
 Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
 The poets imag'd in the golden age;
 Quick let me strip thee of thy tufty coat,

STRIPE. } Dut. Strepen; lineam ducere, to STRIPED. } draw a line; (perhaps a strip.)

A strip or piece from a broader substance; a linear breadth of different colour from the adjoining substance; a blow or lash with any thing long and narrow (like a strip); the mark made by such blow, or lash.

The seruañt that knew his masters wyl, and prepared not him selfe, neyther dyd accordyng to his wyl, shal be beaten w^t many stripes. But he that knew not, and yet dyd cōmytte thynges worthy of stripes, shalbe beaten with fewe

The shaftes of Inde were very longe, a yarde and an halfe, as Arrianus doth saye, or, at the least, a yarde, as Q. Curtius doth saye, and therefore they gave the greater strype.

Ascham. Toxophilus, b. ii.

Strongly he strove out of her greedy gripe
 To loose his shield, and long while did contend;
 But, when he could not quite it, with one stripe
 Her lions clawes he from her feete away did wipe.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

Shall it be said, that my posterity
 Shall live the sole heir of their fathers shame?
 And raise their wealth and glory from my stripes?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act iv. se. 1.

There is a very beautiful sort of wild ass in this country, whose body is curiously striped with equal lists of white and black; the stripes coming from the ridge of his back, and ending under the belly, which is white. These stripes are two or three fingers broad, running parallel with each other, and curiously intermixt, one white and one black, over from the shoulder to the rump.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1691.

For tyranny and slavery do not so properly consist in the stripes that are given and received, as in the power of giving them at pleasure, and the necessity of receiving them whenever and for whatever they are inflicted.

Bolingbroke. Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 13.

In so great prayse of stedfast chastity
 Nathlesse she was so courteous and kynde,
 Tempred with grace and goodly modesty,
 That seemed those two vertues strove to fynd
 The higher place in her heroick mynd;
 So striving each did other more augment.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Who, dying whylome, did divide this fort
 To them by equal shares in equall fee:
 But stryfull mind and diverse qualtee
 Drew them in partes, and each made others foe:
 Still did they strive and daily disagree.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

— Where there is then no good
 For which to strive, no strife can grow up there
 From faction; for none sure will claim in hell
 Precedence, none, whose portion is so small
 Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
 Will covet more.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

For the two last days we had early in the morning a light breeze from the shore, which was strongly impregnated with the fragrance of the trees, shrubs, and herbage that covered it, the smell being something like that of gum benjamin.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

It is a strongish post, narrow street, commanded from within and tenable walls.—Byron. Diary. Jan. 8, 1821.

STRUCTURE. Fr. Structure; It. Struttura; Lat. Structura, from structum, past part. of struere, to build. See CONSTRUCT.

A fabric, frame or building; a putting, setting or fixing together.

Pallas her fauours varied; and addrest
An idoll, that Iphthima did present
In structure of her euery lineament;
Great-sould Icarus daughter.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

But this is yet a weak piece of structure, because the supporters are subject to much impulsio, especially if the line be long.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 31.

[Seneca] describes his baths to have been of so mean a structure, that now, says he, the basest of the people would despise them, and cry out, "Poor Scipio understood not how

STRUGGLE, v. } Perhaps a dim. from STRUGGLE, n. } the verb — to streak or STRUGGLER. } stretch — (A. S. Strecc-an), STRUGGLING, n. } tendere, intendere, contendere,—

To contend, to contest; to combat with, to make exertions, efforts or endeavours; to labour intently.

Up peril of my soule, I shal nat lien,
As me was taught to helpen with your eyen,
Was nothing better for to make you see,
Than stragle with a man upon the tree:
God wot, I did it in ful good entent.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,245.

Euen so is the spirite oppressed and ouer laden of the flesh through custome, that she struggeleth and striueth to get vp and to breake lowse in vayne.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 186.

The Jewes were hard-hearted and malicious strugglers against the trueth.
Martin. Marriage of Priests, (1550,) b. i.

Whyles thus they strugled in that ydle wave,
And strove in vaine, the one himselve to drowne,
The other both from drowning for to save;
Lo! to that shore one in an auncient gowne,
Whose hoary locks great gravitie did crowne,
Holding in hand a goodly arming sword,
By fortune came, ledd with the troublous sowne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Nor. How nature and his honor struggle in him!
A sweet, clear, noble gentleman.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act ii. sc. 5.

— But if they once turne head,
And sally on us from their fleet, when in so deepe a dike
We shall lye struggling; not a man of all the hoast is like
To live, and carry backe the newes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

From whence, if I should pray; or vse command
To be enlarg'd; they should with much more band Containe my struglings.—Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. xii.

And we, as such, should now contribute
Our utmost strugglings to prohibit.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

They are only the uneasy struggles of a man fast bound and fettered.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 54.

Often she cast a kind admiring glance
On the bold struggler for delight.
Buckinghamshire. Ode on Brutus.

At the end of half a minute after that time, the strug glings of the bird seemed finished.
Boyle Works, vol. iii. p. 368.

But when danger is understood, and pain felt, and nature groans under it, then with patience and submission to undergo it, and to conquer all the strugglings of nature against it, that is the duty and excellency of a Christian.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 6.

We are all embarked in one bottom, and have our mutual dangers to struggle with.—Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 9.

They live in a continual strife between conscience, and indulgence. There is something like religion here, it occasions a struggle.—Id. Hints for Sermons, vol. i. § 4.

Crimes lead to greater crimes, and link so strait,
What first was accident, at last is fate:
Guilt's hapless servant sinks into a slave;
And virtue's last sad strugglings cannot save.
Mallet. Prologue to Thomson's Agamemnon

STRU'MOUS. Fr. Strumosité; Lat. Stru- mosus, from struma, a swelling of the glands.

The similitude will hold good of our strumous acidity, which when it lights upon the serum of the blood coagulates it, and when it enters into marrow, though that be in a nearer disposition to hardness than the serum, yet the mixture of this acidity is so far from promoting that hardness, that it rather dissolves the consistency it already hath.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. iv. c. 2.

A woman of about thirty-six years of age, who had formerly been afflicted with a strumous ulcer, came to me with another of an oval figure, very hard, near the muscle mastoides.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted.
Shakespeare, Son. 66.

For if we two be one, and thou play false,
I doe digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion:
Keepe then faire league and truce with thy true bed.
Id. The Comedie of Errors, Act ii. sc. 2.

Lyg. How has my age deserv'd so ill of you, that you can pick no strumpets i' th' land, but out of my breed?
Beaum. & Fletch. A King, and no King, Act v.

— His repose
Would bring no sleepe yet; studying the ill
He wisht the wooers; who came by him still
With all their wenches; laughing, wantoning
In mutuall lightnesse, which his heart did sting;
Contending two wayes; if (all patience fled)
He should rush vp, and strike those strumpets dead.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

How like a yonger or a prodigall
The skarfed barke puts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet winde.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 6.

The prince the damzell by her habit knew,
See, see, this mankinde strumpet, see (he cride)
This shameless whore, for thee fit weapons were Thy need and spindle, not a sword and speare.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xx. s. 95.

At length, when friendly darkness is expir'd,
And every strumpet from her cell retir'd,
She lags behind, and, lingering at the gate,
With a repenting sigh submits to fate.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

There is no peace left for a ravish'd wife
Widow'd by lawless marriage; to all memory,
Penthea's, poor Penthea's name is strumpeted.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iv. sc. 2.

STRUM-STRUM. A noisy instrument, so called from the sound it makes.

The strumstrum is made somewhat like a cittern; most of those that the Indians use are made of a large goad cut in the midst, and a thin board laid over the hollow, and which is fastned to the sides: this serves for the belly; over which the strings are placed.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1684.

 Annot. on Glanville's Preezist. (1682.)

But as dull subjects see too late
 Their safety in monarchical reign,
 Finding their freedom in a state
 Is but proud strutting in a chaine.

Davenant. The Dreame.

They have a small red gill on each side of their heads, like ears, strutting out downwards; but the hens have none.
 Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

I have seen a woman carrying a large bundle on her back, or a child on her back and a bundle under her arm, and a fellow strutting before her with nothing but a club or spear, or some such thing.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

—Resign'd

Stub,—is probably from the A. S. verb Stopp-an,
 to stop; Dut. and Ger. Stoppen; Fr. Estouper;
 It. Stoppare.

Any thing stopped, (sc.) in its growth, from growing; the short, thick, stock, the remnant; any thing short,—a block, a log.

To stub,—to stop; also to remove, to eradicate, a stub or stock. And,— Stubble,—the dim. of stub,—the stems or stalks of corn sheered or shortened. (Menage derives from the Lat. Stipula.)

And thoru haubert and ys coler, that nere nothyng souple,
 He smot of ys heued as lygtlyche as yt were a lute stouple.
 R. Gloucester, p. 223.

First on the wall was painted a forest,
 In which ther wonneth neyther man ne best,
 With knotty knarry barrein trees old
 Of stubbles sharpe and hidious to behold.

Chaucer. The Knight's Tale, v. 1977.

Of many a pilgrim hast thou Cristes curse,
 For of thy perselee yet fare they the werse,
 That they han eten in thy stoble goos.

Id. The Cokes Prologue, v. 4347.

In every green, if the fence be not thine,
 Now stub up the bushes, the grass to be fine.

Tusser. Husbandry. January.

Go buy at the stub, is the best for the buyer,
 More timely provision, the cheaper the fier.—Id. Ib.

And like a stubb'd thorne, which may seeme to serue,
 To stād with such sweete smelling floures, like praises to imaginatiō, traditions and fantasies.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 92.

Her kirtell she did vp tucke
 An ynce aboue her kne
 Her legges that ye might se;
 But they [her legges] were sturdy and stubbled
 Mighty pestels and clubbed.—Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

It is not impossible, and I have heard it verified, that upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kinde; as, that beech hath put forth birch; which if it be true, the cause may be, for that the old stub is too scant of juyce, to put forth the former tree; and therefore putteth forth a tree of smaller kind, that needeth lesse nourishment.—Bacon. Nat. Historie, § 523.

If in anie age some one of them did found a college,
 almshouse, or schoole, if you looke vnto these our times, you shall see no fewer deeds of charitie doone, nor better grounded vpon the right stub of pietie than before.

Holinshead. Description of England, b. ii. c. 1.

I doubt not but ye shall have more ado to drive our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to hale and drag our choicest and hopefuller wits to that asinine feast of sowthistles and brambles which is commonly set before them.—Milton. Of Education.

For as he thus was busy,
 A pain he in his head-piece feels,
 Against a stubb'd tree he reels,
 And up went poor Hobgoblin's heels;
 Alas! his brain was dizzy.
 Drayton. Nymphidia. The Court of Fairy.

But I suppose, that you by thus much seene,
 Know by the stubble, what the corne hath bene.
 Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

Stubble, though it be quickly kindled, yet it is as soon extinguished, if it be not blown by a pertinacious breath, or fed with new materials.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 17.

The base is surrounded with a garland of black and stubby bristles.—Grew. Museum.

While each with stubb'd knife remov'd the roots
 That rais'd between the stones their daily shoots.
 Swift. A Pastoral Dialogue, (1728.)

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
 And prickly stubs, instead of trees are found.
 Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

The hardness of stubb'd vulgar constitutions, renders them insensible of a thousand things, that fret and gall those delicate people, who, as if their skin was peeled off, feel to the quick every thing that touches them.

Berkely. Siris, § 105.

A crow was strutting o'er the stubbled plain,
 Just as a lark, descending, clos'd his train.
 Gay. To Paul Methuen, Esq. Epis. 4.

STUBBORNLY. } Strout-born; Junius,—from STUBBORNNESS. } the Gr. Στρίβος; and Lye,— from the preceding Stub: the last appears the more probable—Stubb; stubber, stubberen, stubborn, or stubborn.

Firm and fixed as a stubb or stock; stiff; unmovable, inflexible, or hard to be moved or bent;
 obstinate; keeping or holding firmly in its place,
 in its course; persisting.

And I was yonge and ful of ragerie,
 Stibborne and strong, and joly as a pie.
 Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6036.

These heretikes be so styffe and stubborne, that rather than they wil cōfesse themself concluded they will holde on their olde wayes and fall from worse to worse.
 Sir T. More. Workes, p. 331.

So that fynally concerning obedience, Tindalles holy doctrine is, that the people shoulde in the defence of hys false heresies, not let to disobey but stubbornly to withstand their prince.—Id. Ib. p. 354.

If it be a thyng that maketh no matter, you will laugh and let it passe, and referre the thyng to other men, and sticke you styfly and stubbornly in earnest and necessary thynges.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 456.

I should either cast downe mine armoure, and hide my selfe like a recreant, or els (of a malicious stubbornness) should busie my braines with some stratagem for to execute an enuious reuenge vpon mine aduersaries.

Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Unto whose froward malice and stubbornesse thou shalt be cōpelled to permitte a thousand thynges agaynst thy conscience.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 190.

Yet she with pittthy words, and counsell sad
 Still strove their stubborne rages to reuoke.
 Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

No stubbornnesse so styffe, nor folly
 To licence ever was so light,
 As twice to trespasse in his sight,
 His lookes would so correct it, when
 It chid the vice, yet not the men.

B. Jonson. An Epitaph on Master Corbel.

—Let me be corrected
 To break my stubbornness if it be so,
 Rather than turn me off, and I shall mend.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act ii. sc. 1.

The wall was stone from neighbouring quarries borne,
 Encircled with a fence of native thorn,
 And strong with pales, by many a weary stroke
 Of stubborn labour hewn from heart of oak;
 Frequent and thick.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

All this, and a great deal more, necessary to guide us into the true meaning of the epistles, is to be had only from the epistles themselves, and to be gathered from thence with stubborn attention and more than common application.

Locke. Paraphrase on St. Paul's Epistles, Pref.

What capacity of mind or will had we to entertain mercy, who were no less stubbornly perverse and obdurate in our crimes, than ignorant or infirm?—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

But stubbornness, and an obstinate disobedience, must be master'd with force and blows: for this there is no other remedy.—Locke. Of Education, § 78.

Thus the main difficulty is answered; but there is another near as stubborn, which this solution likewise removes.

Behold the place, where if a poet
 Shin'd in description, he might show it;
 Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls.
 And tips with silver all the walls;
 Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
 Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors.

Pope. Imitation of Horace, Sat. 6.

Hence all our stucco'd walls, Mosaic floors,
 Palladian windows, and Venetian doors.
 Cawthorn. Of Taste.

From stucco'd walls smart arguments rebound;
 And beaus, adept in ev'ry thing profound,
 Die of disdain, or whistle off the sound.—Cowper. Hope.

Palaces, as adorned with tapestry, are here contrasted with lowly sheds, and smoaky rafters. A modern poet would have written stuccoed halls.—Warton. On Comus.

The body stands on four lofty columns, and has a neat dome in the middle. The roof is beautifully stuccoed.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

For Hermegild too studiously foresaw

The counts allyance with the duke's high blood,

Might from the Lombards such affection draw,

As could by Hubert never be withstood.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 1.

In the interim I crave a candid interpretation of what is passed, and of my studiousness in executing your Lordship's injunctions.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 58.

Men are sometimes generally addicted to vertue, sometimes to vice; sometimes to one vice, sometimes to another; sometimes to civility, sometimes to barbarisme; sometimes to studiousnesse and learning, sometimes to ease and ignorance.—Hakewell. Apologie, b. i. c. 3.

Happy the man, who, studying Nature's laws

Through known effects can trace the secret cause.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

— There studious let me sit,

And hold high converse with the mighty dead;

Sages of ancient time, as gods rever'd,

As gods beneficent, who blest mankind

With arts, with arms, and humaniz'd a world.

Thomson. Winter.

They did suppose every where a Midrash, or mystical sense; which they very studiously (even to an excess of curiosity and diligence) searched after.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 44.

That very philosophy, which had been adopted to invent and explain articles of faith, was now studied only to instruct us in the history of the human mind, and to assist us in developing its faculties, and regulating its operations.

Warburton. Julian, Introd.

He had studiously improved every occasion of insisting upon the futility of their traditions, the vanity of their ceremonies, the insincerity of their devotion—of exposing their ignorance, their pride, their ambition, their avarice.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

STUFF, n.

STUFF, v.

STUFFING, n.

Fr. Estoffe, estoffer; It. Sti-stuff, v. } vare; Sp. Estivar; Dut. Stoffe, stoffen; Ger. Stoff. Junius derives from Gr. Στεῖβ-ω, stipare; Skinner,—perhaps from the Lat. Stupa.

Stuff,—matter, substance, ware, chaffer; (in Fr. also the quality, rank, ability or worth of a man.) Estoffer,—

To stuff, to make with stuff; to furnish or store with all necessaries, (Cotgrave.) And (with us) to stuff is further,—to stow or pack closely or fully, to cram. See Stow.

They encoūtr'd the sayde people y^t caryed the sayde treasure and stuffe.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 123.

His whole matter grounded upon good reason, and stuffed with full argumentes for his intent and purpose.

Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

The church-wardens, for the better relief of honest poverty, shall, upon sufficient surety found for the repayment of the same, lend to some young married couple, or some poor inhabitants of their parish, some part of the said alms, whereby they may buy some kind of stuff: by the working, sale, and gains whereof, they may repay the sum borrowed, and also well relieve themselves.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. pt. ii. b. i. No. 21.

I see well by thy port and chere,

And by thy lokes and thy manere,

And by thy sadnes as thou goest,

And by the sighs that thou out throwest,

That thou art stuffed full of wo.

Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer describing, &c.

Beautie shut vp thy shop, and trusse vp all thy trash

My Nell hath stolne thy finest stuffe, and left thee in the lash.

Gascoigne. A Challenge to Beautie.

What should I here rehearse with base and barraine pen,

The lincked tales and filed stuffe

that I perused then?

Turberville. The Louer to Cupid for Mercie.

Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man, stuffed with all honourable vertues.

Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act i. sc. 1.

For when they should draw their breaths, this stuffing air and dust came in at their mouths so fast, that they had much ado to hold out two days, and on the third yielded themselves unto Sertorius mercy.—North. Plutarch, p. 453.

Like as, for quilts, ticks, and matrasses, the flax of the Cadurei in Fraunce had no fellow: for surely the invention thereof, as also of flockes to stuffe them with, came out of Fraunce.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

Ja. Though in the trade of warre I haue slaine men,
Yet do I hold it very stuffe o' th' conscience
To do no contriud murder.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 2.

Although it nothing content me to have disclos'd thus much before hand, but that I trust hereby to make it manifest with what small willingness I endure to interrupt the pursuit of no less hopes than these, and leave a calm and pleasing solitariness, fed with cheerful and confident thoughts, to imbarke in a troubled sea of noises and hoarse disputes, from beholding the bright countenance of truth in the quiet and still air of delightful studies, to come into the dim reflection of hollow antiquities sold by the seeming bulk, and there be fain to club quotations with men whose learning and belief lies in marginal stuffings.

Milton. The Reason of Church Government, Introd.

Then underneath a lowly roof he led

The weary prince; and laid him on a bed:

The stuffing leaves, with hides of bears o'erspread.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. viii.

Immediately, on the commencement of the action, the mats, with which the galeon had stuffed her netting, took fire.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 8.

No need, he cries, of gravity stuff'd out

With academic dignity devout,

To read wise lectures, vanity the text.—Cowper. Hope.

STULTILOQUY, v. } Lat. Stultiloquium;
STULTIFY, v. } (Stultus, eloquium). Stultify, stultum, fieri, facere. See STOLID.

Stultiloquy,—foolish talk.

Stultify,—to make or cause to appear—a fool.

What they call facetiousness and pleasant wit, is indeed to all wise persons a mere stultiloquy, or talking like a fool.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 23.

But it hath been said, that a non compos himself, though he be afterwards brought to a right mind, shall not be permitted to allege his own insanity in order to avoid such grant: for that no man shall be allowed to stultify himself, or plead his own disability.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 19.

STUM, v.

STUM, n.

STUMMING, n.

Skinner knows not whether from the Dut. Stom; Ger. Stumm, mutus q. d. Vinum mutum, quia nunquam efferbuit; or rather from the Dut. Stomp; Ger. Stumpff, hebes, obtusus, i. e. vinum obtusum, quia (sc.) nulla fermentatione depuratum est. Stum (Tooke) is the past tense and past part. of Stym-an, to steam; and means fumigated, steamed.

Stummed casks are casks fumigated (with brimstone, to prevent the liquor from fermenting.)

Stum is the unfermented juice contained in the cask. See the quotation from Howell.

There is a hard green wine that grows about Rochel, and the islands thereabouts, which the cunning Hollander sometime uses to fetch; and he hath a trick to put a bag of herbs, or some other infusions into it, (as he doth brimstone in Rhenish) to give it a whiter tincture, and more sweetness; then they reimbark it for England, where it passeth for good Bachrag, and this is called stumming of wines.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 54.

When you with High-Dutch Heeren dine,

Expect false Latin, and stumm'd wine;

They never taste, who always drink;

They always talk, who never think.

Prior. Upon a Passage in the Scaligeriana.

What else inspires the tongues and swells the breasts

Of all thy bellowing renegado priests,

That preach up thee for God; dispense thy laws;

And with the stum ferment their fainting cause?

Dryden. The Medal.

The concoction of the food in the stomach is as necessary for its future use, as the fermentation of the stum in the vat is to the perfection of the liquor.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

STUMBLE, v.

STUMBLE, n.

STUMBLER.

STUMBLINGLY.

Junius remarks that the Lat. Cæspitare, is—ad cæspitem impingere et prolabi: to strike against the turf and fall forward; and infers, that to stumble is to strike against a stump, rising or projecting from the surface.

To strike the foot against accidentally; to make a false step; to stop or hinder in the right course; to stagger after a false step.

He stombed at a chance, & felle on his kne,
Thorgh the tother schank he ros, & serued in his degre.
R. Brunne, p. 55.

Let brynge a man in a bot. in myddes a brode water
The wynde and the water. and waggyng of the bote
Maketh the man meny tyme. to stomble yf he stande.
Piers Plouhman, p. 167.

But if he wandre in the nyght, he stomblith, for light is not in him.—Wiclif. Jon. c. 11.

But if a man walck in the nighte, he stobleth, because there is no lyghte in him.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

He thurgh the thickest of the throng gan threste.
Ther stomblen stedes strong, and doun goth all.
He rolleth under foot as doth a ball.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2615.

Where discipline shall be but deemed wayne,
Where blockes are stridde by stumblers at a strawe,
And where selfe will must stande for martiall lawe.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

It will none otherwise be, but that some stumbling blockes wyl alway bee by malicouse folke laied in good peoples way.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 356.

I know not whether to marvel more, either that he [Chaucer] in that misty time could see so clearly, or that we in this clear age go so stumblingly after him.
Sidney. Defence of Poesy.

Tho went the pensive damme out of dore
And chaunst to stumble at the threshold flore;
Her stombling steppe somewhat her amazed,
(For such, as signes of ill lucke, bene dispraised.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

Cel. Stay, stay, this cannot be.
Gov. I say it must be;
I hope to find ye still the same good lady.
Cel. To th' court? this stumbles me: art sure for me wench,
This preparation is?
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act iii. sc. 2.

I was told of a Spaniard, who having got a fall by a stumble, and broke his nose, rose up, and in a disdainful manner said, this is to walk upon earth.
Howell, b. i. Let. 32.

By this unreasonable custom they [the Chinese] do in a manner lose the use of their feet, and instead of going they only stumble about their houses, and presently squat down on their breeches again, being, as it were, confined to sitting all days of their lives.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

The old Arians would have detested such practices: the ὀλισσίων, alone was such a stumbling-block to them, that very few could get over it; and they would never insert it in their creeds.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 305.

Forth as she waddled in the brake,
A grey goose stumbled on a snake,
And took th' occasion to abuse her,
And of rank plagiarism accuse her.—Smart, Fab. 4.

STUMP, n. } Dut. Stompe; Ger. Stumpe;
STUMP, v. } Sw. Stump; Dut. Stompen; Ger.
STUMPY. } Stummeler, stumpeln; Sw. Stym- pa, truncare, mutilare, obtusum reddere, to cut down the trunk, limb or member. Stump, n.—

The part left, the stub or stock left, when the trunk or limb is cut or lopped.

To stump, also, consequentially, is, to move like one with his limbs cut down to a stump; stiffly, heavily, noisily.

But the good man understood not, that even the best translation, is for mere necessitie but an evill impd wing to flie withall, or a heave stompe leg of wood to go withall.
Ascham. The Scholemaster, b. ii.

So haue they deignd, by their deuine decrees,
That with the stumps of my reproved tong,
I may sometimes, reprobours deedes reprove,
And sing a verse, to make them see themselves.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Inflam'd with wrath, his raging blade he hefte,
And strooke so strongly, that the knotty string
Of his huge taile he quite asonder clefte;
Five ioints thereof he hewd, and but the stump him lefte.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Around the stumped top soft moss did grow.
More. Song of the Soul, b. i. c. 2. s. 59.

He had a brother also who never cast his foreteeth, and therefore he wore them before, to the very stumps.
Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

Ev'n stumps of olives, bar'd of leaves, and dead,
Revive and oft redeem their wither'd head.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

One of the horses snap off the end of his finger with the glove. I dress'd the stump with the common digestive.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 3.

They burn the stubble, which, being so stumpy, they seldom plow in.—Mortimer.

There, like the visionary emblem seen
By him of Babylon, life stands a stump,
And, filleted about with hoops of brass,
Still lives, though all his pleasant boughs are gone.
Cooper. Task, b. v.

Mr. Bank's greyhound, which was with us, got sight of it, and would probably have caught it, but the moment he set off he lamed himself, against a stump which lay concealed in the long grass.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 1.

STUN, v. See ASTONE. A. S. Stun-ian, im-pingere, allidere, obtundere aures alicui obstupe-facere, to dash, or beat against; to dun. Ge-stun, strepitus. Fr. Estonne, Menage says is—exto-natus, for extonitus, the same as—atonitus.

To benumb, to dull or deaden, to stupefy, (sc.)
the sense or sensations.

Now see then good reader the madnes of maister Masker, that sayth here, that that thing must nedes haue made the apostles wonder, stoned, & stagger, at the time when Christ spake those wordes in the syxth chapter of Saynte John.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1112.

Yet, therewith sore enrag'd, with sterne regard
Her dreadfull weapon she to him addrest,
Which on his helmet martelled so hard
That made him low incline his lofty crest,
And bowd his battred visour to his brest:
Wherewith he was so stund that he n'ote ryde,
But reeled to and fro from east to west.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

In fighting, that is held a heavier blow, that (stunning) takes away the sense of pain, than that which pains the sense.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 6.

If Nature thunder'd in his opening ears,
And stunn'd him with the music of the spheres,
How would he wish that heaven had left him still
The whispering zephyr, and the purling rill!
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 1.

Still shall I hear, and never quit the score, Stunned with hoarse Codrus' Theseld, o'er and o'er?
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 1.

He [Hacho, a king of Lapland] consoled his countrymen, when they were once preparing to leave the frozen deserts of Lapland, and resolved to seek some warmer climate, by telling them that the Eastern nations, notwithstanding their boasted fertility, passed every night amidst the horrors of anxious apprehension, and were inexpressibly affrighted, and almost stunned, every morning, with the noise of the sun while he was rising.—The Idler, No. 96.

STUNG. See STING.

STUNT, n. } From the A. S. Stunta, stunte, STUNT, v. } stultus, fatuus, or from the verb to stand, (Skinner.) "Stunt (Tooke) is—stopped in the growth, the past part. of stint-an, to stop."
See To STINT.

A stunt is—an animal, or other thing, stinted or stunted in its growth. To stunt, formed upon the noun, is—

To stop; to grow or become short or stubbed.

When waggish boys the stunted beesom ply,
To rid the slabby pavement, pass not by Ere thou hast held their hands.—Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

Of all the expedients that can well be contrived to stunt the natural growth of a new colony, that of an exclusive company is undoubtedly the most effectual.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

STUPE, n. } Lat. Stuppa, or stupa, the tow,
STUPE, v. } or coarse part of the line or flax.
Linen, woollen, &c. medicated; and applied to sores.

I took off the dressings, and found the heat somewhat allay'd, and the ulcer well disposed to digestion. I stuped the ulcer.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 3.

But it was in vain; this pretender dressed the wound with a tent proportionable to the former anointed with some unguent binding a stupe over it.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 1.

Astonishing, amazing, wonderful, prodigious.

They [daemons] can worke stupend and admirable conclusions: we see the effects only, but not the causes of them.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 220.

The king hath been there long in person with his cardinal; and the stupendous works they have rais'd by sea and land, are beyond belief, as they say.
Howell, b. i. Let. 6.

It is a stupendious monastery, built on the top of a huge land-rock.—Howell, b. i. Let. 23.

Windsor the next (where Mars with Venus dwells, Beauty with strength) above the valley swells
Into my eye, and doth itself present
With such an easy and unford'd ascent,
That no stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes.
Denham. Cooper's Hill.

I could charitably believe of all the primitive Pythagoreans that they swore in the same sense that Pythagoras did, namely, by the first communicatour of so high and stupen- dious a piece of wisdom.

More. Defence of the Philos. Cabbala, App.

Now besides this flatulencie that solicits to lust, there may be such a due dash of sanguine in the melancholy, that the complexion may prove stupendiously enravishing.

Id. A Discourse on Enthusiasm, p. 14.

He patient, but undaunted where they led him,
Came to the place, and what was set before him
Which without help of eye might be assay'd,
To heave, pull, draw, or break, he still perform'd
All with incredible, stupendious force,
None daring to appear antagonist.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, v. 623.

Those very works, which, from their stupendiousness, should have taught them the greatness of the former, were the occasion of their paying that homage to the thing made, which could be due to the worker only.

Ellis. Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 270.

He [God] to assure them of his gracious protection and providence over them, or to persuade them of the truth of what he by Moses taught them, did before their eyes perform stupendious works in their behalf.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

He ceaseless works alone; and yet alone
Seems not to work: with such perfection fram'd
Is this complex stupendous scheme of things.

Thomson. Spring.

[This most potent author] so regulating the stupendiously swift motions of the great globes, and other vast masses of the mundane matter, that they do not, by any notable irregularity, disorder the grand system of the universe.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 519.

These fathers used so strange a language, in speaking of the last supper, that it gave occasion to a corrupt and barbarous church, in after-times, to ingraft upon it a doctrine more stupendiously absurd and blasphemous than ever issued from the mouth of a pagan priest.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. Note (Q.)

Under this stupendous Being we live. Our happiness, our existence is in his hands. All we expect must come from him.—Paley. Natural Theology, Conclusion.

STUPOR.

Like a log or block; hard or difficult to receive impressions, or perceptions; inapprehensive, insensitive, dull, obtuse; thick, heavy; sluggish, inert.

Is not your father growne incapable Of reasonable affayres? Is he not stupid
With age, and altring rheumes? can he speake? heare?
Know man, from man?
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

No man who knows aught, can be so stupid to deny that all men naturally were born free, being the image and resemblance of God himself, and were by privilege above all the creatures, born to command and not to obey.

Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

The dreadful bellowing of whose strait-brac'd drums,
To the French sounded like the dreadful doom;
And them with such stupidity benumbs,
As though the earth had groaned from her womb.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

He utters enough to make a stone understand it; how stupidly soever all his interpreters would have Hector (being strooke into a trembling, and almost dead) turne about like a whirlwinde.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

He so applies himself to his pillow, as a man meant not to be drowned in sleep, but refreshed; not limiting his rest by the insatiable lust of a sluggish and drowzie stupidness, but by the exigence of his health, and habilitation to his calling.—Bp. Hall. The Christian.

Whom when discovered they had throughly eide,
With great amazement they were stupefide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

— For when a general loss
Falls on a nation, and they slight the cross,
God hath rais'd prophets to awaken them
From stupefaction. An Elegy upon Dr. Donne.

Opium hath a stupefactive [4to ed. of Works, stupefactive] part, and a heating part; the one moving sleep, the other a heat.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 98.

Opium and other strong stupefactive, doe coagulate the spirits and deprive it of the motion.

Id. Hist. of Life & Death, p. 52.

There were not only great things first spoken and delivered to mankind, but examples as great as the things themselves; but these did so little prevail on the stupid and unthankful world, that they among whom the Son of God did first manifest himself, seem'd only solicitous to make good one prophesie concerning him, viz. that he should be despised and rejected of men.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 6.

I mention not how the Sabellian hypothesis must have been very needlessly and stupidly clogged by such a tenet: for they could never have given any tolerable account of the Son's praying to the Father, of his increasing in wisdom, of his being afflicted and sore troubled, and crying out in his agonies and sufferings, without the supposition of a human soul.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 267.

Stupidity then under sufferings can be no part of the excellency of a man; which in its greatest height is in the beings the most beneath him.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 6.

And even the atheists themselves, who have tried all possible ways of extinguishing them, have found by experience that the utmost they can do, is to damp and stupify them at present; but that in despite of them they will revive and awake again when death or danger approaches them.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 3.

We know that insensibility of pain may as well proceed from the deadness and stupifiedness of the part, as from a perfect and unmolested health.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 6.

Whether the natural phlegm of this island needs any additional stupifier?—Berkley. The Querist, § 348.

It seems very probable, that there was a much more powerful cause than sorrow in the case, viz. a preternatural stupefaction of their senses, by some of those malignant spirits that were then conflicting with our Saviour; who, perhaps, to deprive him of the solace of his disciples' company, did by their diabolical art, produce that extraordinary stupor that oppressed them.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

But let not him, that shares a brighter day
Traduce the splendour of a noontide ray,
Prefer the twilight of a darker time,
And deem his base stupidity no crime.—Cowper. Truth.

But what long and tormenting struggles must they probably have experienced first; and in how deplorable a state must the benumbing and stupefying of so important a principle of their nature have left them!—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

It produced that kind of stupefaction, which is the consequence of using opium, or other substances of that kind.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 8.

Laugh, ye who boast your more mercurial pow'rs,
That never felt a stupor, know no pause,
Nor need one; I am conscious, and confess Fearless, a soul, that does not always think.

Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Such ioy he had their stubborne harts to quell,
And sturdie courage tame with dreadfull aw;
That his beheast they feared, as a tyrans law.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Then wean thyself at last, and thee withdraw
From Cambridge, thy old nurse; and, as the rest,
Here toughly chew and sturdily digest
Th' immense last volumes of our common law.

Donne. To Mr. B. B.

Ev'n in this early dawning of the year,
Produce the plough, and yoke the sturdy steer,
And goad him till he groans beneath his toil,
Till the bright share is bury'd in the soil.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

It [excessive fondness] will rather produce pride and sturdiness for the present: which will at length show itself in ill manners, contempt, and rudeness towards their best and kindest friends.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 473.

A wicked administration may propose to impoverish the people; to render them as submissive and as abject as the subjects, the boors, or the slaves, in some foreign countries, and to beggar them out of their sturdiness.

Patient of contradiction as a child,
Affable, humble, diffident, and mild;
Such was sir Isaac, and such Boyle and Locke:
Your blund'r'er as sturdy as a rock.

Cowper. Progress of Error.

STURGEON. Fr. Esturgeon; It. Storione;
Low Lat. Sturio, or sturgio; Ger. Stor; Sw.
Stoor; A. S. Styria. Gesner derives from Ger.
Stoor-en, A. S. Stir-ian, to stir, to move; because it stirs up the mud as it swims.

In old time our auncestours set more store by the stur- geon, and it carried the name above all other fishes. He is the only fish that hath the scales growing toward the head:
hee swims against the streame. But now adaies there is no such reckoning and account made of him.

Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 17.

STURK. A. S. Styrc, (steer-ic.) A young ox or steer; a young cow or heifer. Lanc. a sturke, (Somner.) See STEER.

The stirkes or young beefets vngelded, we either kill young

STUT, v. } The Ger. Stottern, impedit
STUTTER, n. } loqui, lingua alidere, Wachter STUTTER, v. } derives from Ger. Stossen, Dut.
STUTTERER. } Stooten, Sw. Stoota, Goth. Staut- an, ferire, percutere; to strike against (sc.) with the tongue; and hence,—

To hesitate in utterance or speaking.
To stutter—is in common use.

Her tongue was verye quicke
But she spake somewhat thicke
Her felowe did stammer and stut.

Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

Divers we see do stut; the cause may be, (in most) the refrigeration of the tongue; whereby it is less apt to move, and therefore we see, that naturalls do generally stut: and we see that in those that stut if they drink wine moderately, they stut less, because it heateth; and so we see, that they that stut, do stut more in the first offer to speak, than in continuance; because the tongue is by motion, somewhat heated.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 386.

And many stutters (we find) are very choleric men:
choler enducing a driness in the tongue.—Id. Ib.

Thus a learned author informeth us, that some families at Labloin in Guyen in France do naturally stut and stammer, which he taketh to proceed from the nature of the waters.

Fuller. Worthies. Leicestershire.

When the wind is southward, she is more subject to cende the hylle, for so longe as they kept the hyl it was iuperdous and perylous to stye toward theym.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1327.

The beast, impatient of his smarting wound
And of so fierce and forcible despyght,
Thought with his winges to stye above the ground;
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

And all that preace did round about her swell
To catchen hold of that long chaine, thereby
To climbe aloft, and others to excell;
That was Ambition, rash desire to sty,
And every link thereof a step of dignity.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 7.

Those that are smitten from above upon the head, stie

Had roome and vse, for fifty swine to lye.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement,
But boast themselves more comely than before;
And all their friends and native home forget,
To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty.—Milton. Comus.

The marrow of a calfe, incorporat with equall weight of wax and common oile or oile rosat, together with an egge, maketh a soveraigne liniment for the stian or any other hard swellings in the eyelids.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 11.

Each friend you seek in yon enclosure lies,
All lost their form, and habitants of sties.

Moxon.

In these words, you will observe, the great Being who was styled the loving Father of the people, is addressed in the specific character of a teacher; for the expression of sitting at his feet describes the attitude of scholars listening to the lessons of a master.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 25.

It is the region within which we look for every thing that is sublime in description, tender in sentiment, and bold and lively in expression; and therefore though an author's plan should be faultless, and his story ever so well conducted, yet, if he be feeble, or flat in style, destitute of affecting scenes, and deficient in poetical colouring, he can have no success.—Blair, Lect. 10.

From the centre of the flower rises a style of a triangular form, and obtuse at the end, which is surrounded by six white stamina, whose extremities are yellow.

SUA'VITY. Fr. Suave, suavité; It. Soave, soavita; Sp. Suave, suavidad; Lat. Suavitas, from suavis, sweet; A. S. Swæs. See SWEET.

Met.—Sweetness.

[He spake much] thirdly of the suavity of their doctrine in the word peace and good things.

Hale. Rem. Let. from the Synod of Dort.

It is certain, that Plato does not only very much commend the Orphick hymns, for their suavity and deliciousness, but also produce some verses out of them, without making any scruple concerning their author.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 296.

But the other love which ariseth from the conceit of our special dearness to God upon insufficient grounds; that goes no further than to some suavities, and pleasant fancies within our selves; and some passionate complements of the image we have set up in our imaginations.

Glanvil, Ser. 1.

I know not whether the curiosa felicitas, or that charm of his writings which resulted from study and happiness united, may not be said to consist in delicacy of sentiment and suavity of expression.—Knox. Ess. No. 104.

SUB. Sub is much used, prefixed, to express inferiority in degree, rank; less, low, down; and, consequentially, under cover, hidden, secret. The use of it is mere matter of discretion.

Sub-acid,—less than acid, or sour; acid in a less degree.

The juice of the stem is like the chyle in an animal body, not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly sub-acid in all plants.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 3.

SUB-ACT, v. } Lat. Sub-igere, subactum,

E—No vine is a tree. O—Some vine is not a tree.

Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2. § 3.

A stronger proof cannot be given of the skill and vigilance of our subaltern officers, to whom this share of merit almost entirely belongs.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 11.

By placing Cowley in the first rank of poets, he has in effect degraded him from the subaltern station which he had else preserved unmolested.—Knox. Ess. No. 169.

SUB-A/QUEOUS. Being, lying, under water, (sub aquam.)

The northern naturalists will perhaps say, that this assembly met for the purpose of plunging into their sub-aqueous winter quarters; but was that the case, they would never escape discovery in a river perpetually fished as the Thames; some of them must inevitably be brought up in the nets that harass that water.

Pennant. British Zoology. Swallows.

The first who broached this opinion, was Olaus Magnus, Archbishop of Upsal, who very gravely informs us, that these birds are often found in clustered masses at the bottom of the northern lakes, mouth to mouth, wing to wing, foot to foot; and that they creep down the reeds in autumn, to their subaqueous retreats.—Id. ib.

SUB-ARRA'TION. Low Lat. Sub-arrare. Arrabone, (i. e. vadimonio,) uxorem sibi desponsare, (Du Cange.) See the quotation.

In the old manual for the use of Salisbury, before the minister proceeds to the marriage, he is directed to ask the woman's dowry, viz. the tokens of spousage; and by these tokens of spousage are to be understood rings, or money, or some other things to be given to the woman by the man, which said giving is called subarration, (i. e. wedding or covenanting,) especially when it is done by the giving of a ring.—Wheatly. On the Common Prayer, c. 10. § 5.

H.—I think it will: and, if it must have a name, it should rather be called subaudition than abstraction, though I mean not to quarrel about a title.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 2.

SUB-CELESTIAL. Being under the heavens, or heavenly things, (sub cœlestia.)

If there can be found any decay in the heavens, it will in the course of nature, and discourse of reason consequently follow, that there must of necessity ensue a decay in all those which depend upon the heavens: as likewise on the other side, if there be found no decay in the heavens, the presumption will be strong, that there is no such decay (as is supposed) in these subcœlestia bodies.

Hakewell. Apologie, b. ii. c. 1.

Even he [Solomon] passeth the same sentence of vanity, vexation, and unprofitableness, upon this, as upon all other subcœlestia things.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

SUB-CLAVIAN. Fr. Susclavier. Upon the kannel bone, whence, veine susclavière. The second main ascending branch of the hollow vein, (Cotgrave.) See CLAVICLE.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet by the subclavian division doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

Concerning the difference of matter, in which the subclavian and carotid arteries, upon the different sides of the body, separate themselves from the aorta, Cheselden seems to have thought, that the advantage which the left gain by going off at an angle much more acute than the right, is made up to the right by their going off together in one branch.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

SUB-COMMITTEE. A committee under or inferior to another.

Yet by their sequestrators and sub-committees abroad, men for the most part of insatiable hands, and noted disloyalty, those orders were commonly disobeyed.

Milton. History of England, b. iii.

SUB-CONSTELLATION. An inferior or less constellation.

We will not controvert the picture of the seven stars; although if thereby be meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, either in site or magnitude, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover, from July unto April.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 19.

SUB-CONTRACTED. Contracted under or by any one under—a previous contract.

—For your claime, faire sisters,
I bare it in the interest of my wife,
'Tis she is sub-contracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your banes.

Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act v. sc. 3.

SUB-CONTRARY. That which is contrary in a lower or inferior degree.

The other [number] which surmounteth, and is surmounted by the same part of their extremities, is named Hypenantia, that is to say, sub-contrary.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 850.

If they differ in quality and agree in quantity then they are called contrary, or subcontrary. Contrary when they are universal, as, every man is an animal; No man is an animal. Subcontrary, when they are particular, as, some man is an animal; some man is not an animal.

Port Royal Logic, pt. ii. c. 4.

If two particular propositions differ in quality they are subcontraries; as,

I—Some vine is a tree. O—Some vine is not a tree.
These may be both true together, but they can never be both false.—Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2. § 3.

Donne. Upon Mr. Thos. Coryat's Crudities.

Amongst some men a sect is sufficiently thought to be reprov'd, if it subdivides and breaks into little fractions, or changes its own opinions.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

He [Stephen Langton] was the first that divided the whole Bible into chapters, as Robert Stephens, a French-man, that curious critick and painful printer, some six score years since, first subdivided into verses.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

The Manicheans professed themselves not to have derived this opinion from the Pagans, nor to be a subdivision under them, or schism from them, but a quite different sect by themselves.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 223.

It might not be amiss, for the sake of clear and distinct conception, to subdivide literal into its two main branches, as I have here done, into historical and doctrinal.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 4.

In every other art and manufacture, the effects of the division of labour are similar to what they are in this very trifling one, though, in many of them, the labour can neither be so much subdivided, nor reduced to so great a simplicity of operation.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 1.

With respect to myself, as I consist of two parts, a body and a mind, my duty to myself again separates itself into two correspondent subdivisions.—Knox, Ess. 80.

SUB-DIVINE. Divine in a lower or less degree.

Surely, no more can our minds conceive of you, [Spirits] than our eyes can see you: only, since he, that made you, hath given us some little glimpse of your subdivine natures, properties, operations, let us weakly as we may, recount them to his glory in yours.

SUB-DO/LOUS. Lat. Sub-dolus, (sub and dolus,) used as equivalent to dolus.

Cunning, crafty, sly, deceitful.

They are the subtlest, I will not say the most subdulous dealers.—Howell, b. i. Let. 41.

They are accounted the subtlest and most subdulous people upon earth.—Id. Let. 14.

As he doth not affect my poor base ends, so he will not defile his fair intentions by sordid means of compassing them; such as are illusive simulations and subdulous artifices, treacherous collusions, &c.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

SUBDU/CE, v. } Lat. Sub-ducere, sub-duc- SUBDU/CT, v. } tum, to lead away, to with-

SUBDU/CTION. } draw.

To withdraw; to take away; to subtract.

How well might you have thought, our master is not subduced, but risen; had hee beene taken away by others hands, this fine linnen had not beene left behinde.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Resurrection.

For never was the earth so peevish as to forbid the sun when it would shine on it, or to slink away, or subduce itself from its rayes.—Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 14.

If out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generation, we should by the operation of the understanding subduce ten, whether we subduct that number of ten out of the last generations of men, or out of generations a thousand years since, or indeterminately out of the whole collection, certainly the residue must needs be less by ten than it was before that subduction made.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 10.

Or nature faild in mee, and left some part

Not proof enough such object to sustain,

Or from my side subducting, took perhaps

More than enough. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Oh that we were not more capable of distrust, then thine omnipotent hand is of weariness and subduction.

Bp. Hall. Occasional Meditations, § 66.

When God promised Moses, that an angel should go before Israel; and yet, withal, threatened the subduction of his own presence; I marvel not, if the holy man were no less troubled, than if they had been left destitute and guardless.—Id. The Invisible World, b. i. § 4.

For subducting either the benefits commonly indulged to mankind, or those which accrue from the welfare of public society, what possibility will remain of subsistence, of safety, of content unto us? what but confusion, want, violence, and disquiet?—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 9.

I went to this clandestine lodging, and found, to my amazement, all the ornaments of a fine gentleman, which I know not whether he has taken upon credit, or purchased with money subducted from the shop.—Idler, No. 95.

The Chinese physicians never prescribe bleeding, but allay the heat of the blood by abstinence, diet, and cooling herbs; saying, that, if the pot boil too fast, it is better to subduct the fuel, than lade out the water.

Horne. Essays & Thoughts, No. 18.

SUBDU/E, v. } Skinner derives from the SUBDU/ABLE. } Lat. Subdere. It may be a reduce to obedience; to overpower or overcome;

to vanquish; to subjugate, to subject.

[He] would make the world wene, that heretikes wer here so many and so strong, that the ordinaries might not nowe dooe theyr duties in subduyng heresies, withoute greate daunger.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 962.

Here may ye clerely see, good christen reader, that the holy and blessed apostle Paule with mani other mō, dyd not fast in this luster for the subduyng of ye flesh and taming of bodily lustes.—Id. ib. p. 371.

He was a man of rare redoubted might,
Famous throughout the world for warlike prayse,
And glorious spoiles, purchast in perilous fight;
Full many doughtie knightes he in his dayes
Had doen to death, subdewde in equall frayes.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

I must ingenuously confess that I have a natural touch of enthusiasme in my complexion, but such as, I thank God, was ever governable enough, and I have found at length perfectly subduable.

More. Philosophical Writings, Pref. Gen.

—And I haue seen thee

It will be proper, if you take it objectively,—their fear,—be Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

Thus, no man can be a prince without subjects, nor a master without servants, nor a father without children.
And this both explains and confirms the doctrine of the text; for where there is a mutual dependence, there must be a mutual duty, and consequently a mutual subjection.
Swift. A Sermon on Mutual Subjection.

Then what indignant sorrow must I have mankind, and may therefore be hard to be digested by those, who value themselves upon their greatness or their wealth;

yet it is really no more then what most men practice upon other occasions.—Swift. A Sermon on Mutual Subjection.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty, is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other is in our minds.—Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2. § 8.

Id. Task, b. v.

The law, which restrains a man from doing mischief to his fellow-citizens, though it diminishes the natural, increases the civil liberty of mankind; but every wanton and causeless

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

SUB-INFER, v. To make a lower or inferior inference, to deduce an inference from one already made.

From the force then of this relation, it is easily sub-inferred, that it is not lawful for Christian churches, upon differences upon points not essential to the faith, either voluntarily to forsake the communion of each other, or forcibly to abdicate and thrust out each other from their communion.—Bp. Hall. Resol. for Religion

SUB-INGRESSION. Lat. Sub, and ingressus.

An entrance or ingression—at a lower or inferior part, in a less degree.

The ingenious experimenter has observed in his third experiment, this forcible endeavour of the subingression of the air is not from the pressure of the ambient air as strengthened by the accession of the air sucked out.

Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. vi. c. 2.

The subjugation of nations, by the prosecution of this war, is the triumph of the church over idolatry, which first took place in the reign of Constantine the Great, when the Christian religion was established in the Roman empire, and idolatry put down by that emperor's authority.

SUB-LAPSA'RIAN. Lat. Sub, and lapsus, from labi, to slip or slide down, to fall down. See the quotations.

Next then for the supralapsarians, with whom the object of the decree is man created, not yet fallen, and the sublapsarians, with whom it is man fallen, or the corrupt mass, your rejections and reasons thereof are twined together, and are especially two, which you justly call very weighty.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 670.

And let it then be considered, whether this be not as bad as the worst; for the supralapsarians say God did decree that the greatest part of mankind should perish only because he would. The sublapsarians say, that God made it by his decree necessary, that all we who are born of Adam should be born guilty of original sin, and he it was who decreed to damn whom he pleased for that sin, in which he decreed they should be born; and both these he did for no other consideration, but because he would.

But ripens spirits in cold northern climes.

Pope. Essay on Criticism, v. 399.

Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,

And bless their critic with a poet's fire.

An ardent judge, who zealous in his trust,

With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;

Whose own example strengthens all his laws;

And is himself that great sublime he draws.

Id. Ib. v. 675.

Thus shone his coming, as sublimely fair

As bounded nature has been fram'd to bear;

But all his further marks of grandeur hid

Nor what he could was known, but what he did.

Parnell. The Gift of Poetry. Habakkuk.

Mr. Nairn was then the admired preacher of that country, remarkable for accuracy of style, as well as strength of reasoning and sublimeness of thought.

Burnet. History of his own Time.

Jerome represents the man, his thoughts, words, and works sublimated, in a manner, by the fire of the spirit, and, as it were, spiritualized into an heavenly composition, so as to become a most acceptable sacrifice unto God.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 317.

I had subdivided the body of gold into such minute particles, that they were sublimable, (for that I can assure you is possible.)—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 57.

I have been credibly informed, that great quantities of it [white salt] have been cast up in the fiery eruptions, and therefore store of it might in likelihood be dispersed through the air, since I found the salt itself to be sublimable.

Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 629.

He soon obtained such another concrete, both as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common salt armoniac.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 573.

It has been anciently, not absurdly said, that sublimations are the chemist's pestles, since (as in flowers of sulphur and antimony) they do really resolve the elevated bodies into exceeding fine flower, and much finer than pestles and mortars are wont to bring them to.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 303.

These [sulphur, mercury, and vermilion] will rise together in sublimatory vessels, without being divorced by the fire, and will act in many cases as one physical body.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 96.

There will be little occasion to use many previous words in proving, that the sublime is a certain eminence or perfection of language, and that the greatest writers, both in verse and prose, have by this alone obtain'd the prize of glory, and fill'd all time with their renown.

Smith. Longinus. On the Sublime.

It appears to me, that none of these theorists have paid sufficient attention to the word sublime in its literal and primitive sense; or to the various natural associations founded on the physical and moral concomitants of great altitude.—Stewart. Philos. Ess. On the Sublime.

A skilful chemist, though disappointed in his grand magisterium, yet often discovers, by the way, some useful and noble medicament; while the ignorant pretender to the art, not only loses his labour, but fills all about him with the poisonous steams of sublimate.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. i. s. 4.

In reflecting on the circumstances by which sublimity in its primitive sense is specifically distinguished, the first thing that strikes us is, that it carries the thoughts in a direction opposite to that in which the great and universal law of terrestrial gravitation operates.

Stewart. Philos. Ess. On the Sublime.

These were the persons who were so captivated with the sublimity of our Saviour's doctrines, as to declare that he who had so admirably discoursed there could be no other than the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

Sublimatorie, a vessel used by chemists in sublimation, i. e. separating certain parts of a body, and driving them to the top of the vessel, in the form of a very fine powder.

Tyrwhitt. Glossary to Chaucer.

SUB-LUNAR. } It. Sublunare; Sp. Sub-
SUBLUNARY, adj. } lunar; Fr. Sublunaire; Lat.
SUBLUNARY, n. } Sub and lunaris, from luna, (quasi lucina, a lucendo.) the moon.

Under, beneath or below, the moon: consequently—earthly, terrestrial, mundane.

Now had night measur'd with her shaddowle cone
 Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

But to obey those laws which he hath given,
 And bow unto the just decrees of heaven,
 Which cannot err, whatever foggy mists
 Do blind men in these sublunary lists.—Drummond, s. 18.

Man like this sublunary world, is born
 The sport of two cross planets, love and scorn;
 Woman the other world resembles well,
 In whose looks heav'n is, in whose breast is hell.
Sherburne. The Microcosm.

These sublunaries have their greatest freshness plac'd in only hope.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 66.

That boundless ocean contains a variety of excellent objects, that is as little to be exhausted, as the creatures, that live in our sublunary ocean, or lie on the shores, that limit it, can be numbered.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 153.

That the holy angels are often employed by God in his government of this sublunary world, is indeed clearly to be proved by holy writ.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 29.

Yet being free I love thee [England]; for the sake
 Of that one feature can be well content,
 Disgrac'd as thou hast been, poor as thou art,
 To seek no sublunary rest beside.—Cowper. Task, b. v.

SUB-MARINE. Lat. Sub, and marinus, from mare, the sea.

Under, beneath, or below the sea.

By the appellation of submarine regions it is not to be supposed that the places so called are below the bottom of the sea, but only below the surface of it.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 342.

Their various forms, also, contributed to increase the richness of this submarine grotto, which could not be surveyed without a pleasing transport, mixed, however, with regret, that a work, so stupendously elegant, should be concealed, in a place where mankind could seldom have an opportunity of rendering the praises justly due to so enchanting a scene.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3.

SUB-MERGE, v. } Fr. Submerger; It. Som-
SUBMERGION. } mèrgere; Lat. Submergere, (sub, and mergere.) to put under the waters of the sea, (mare.)

To plunge or sink under; to drown, to overwhelm.

Mes. Should I lye Madame?
 Cleo. Oh, I would thou didst:
 So halfe my Egypt were submerg'd and made
 A cesterne for scald snakes.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 5.

Many of his chief gentry spoyld, lost, and submerged, in the impious inundation and torrent of their still-growing malice.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Martial Maid, Act v. sc. 3.

Many instances of this kind are remembered by Pliny, not only of the great Atlantick Island mentioned by the Egyptian priest in Plato's Timæus, of a great bigness, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean to which it hath given its name of the Atlantick Ocean; which if true, might for ought we know afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 190.

Some of our own countrymen have given credit to the submersion of swallows; and Klein patronises the doctrine strongly, giving the following history of their manner of retiring, which he received from some countrymen and others.

Pennant. British Zoology. Swallows.

SUB-MINISTER, v. } Fr. Subministre; It.
SUBMINISTRATE. } Somministrare; Lat.
SUBMINISTRANT. } Subministrare, (sub, SUBMINISTRATION. } and minister,—a less (minor), an inferior agent.)

To act as inferior agent or servant under (sc.
 another minister); to serve under or subserve.

Some things have been discovered not only by the ingeny and industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministred unto man the invention or discovery of many things both natural and artificial and medicinal.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 154.

The admirable accommodation of faculties with submistring faculties, and organs subservient, appropriate, and convenient for their exercise.—Id. Ib. p. 327.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks.—Harvey.

Therefore for that which is most principal and final to be left undone, for the attending of that which is subservient and subministrant, seemeth to be against proportion of reason.—Bacon. On the Church of England.

Which [treaty] the electors of Mentz and Colen have broken by permission of Spinola; nay, divers ways, by sub-ministration of commodities to his army.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 529.

miss,—
 Low, or inferior; humble, humiliated, abased;
 obedient, yielding; subject, subservient.

So am I yours, and will be verely,
 I challenge nought of right, and reason why,
 For I am hole submit vnto your seruice.
Chaucer. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

No, quoth I, not if he willinglye retourned to the church knowledging hys fault, & ready to abiure all heresies, and penitently submitted himself to penance.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 214.

With the most submissive manner his behaviour could yield, O goddess, said he, towards whom I have the greatest feeling of religion, be not displeased at some show of devotion. I have made to Apollo.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Yet would she hearke, ne let him once respyre,
 Till he to her delivered had his shield,
 And to her mercie him submitted in plaine field.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

All is not lost; the unconquerable will,
 And study of revenge, immortal hate,
 And courage never to submit or yield:
 And what is else not to be overcome?
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

— His strong hand, still drave it mortally
 On prince Hypsenor; it did pierce, his liver, underneath
 The veines it passeth: his shrunke knees, submitted him to death.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

Sick but confident submitters of themselves to this empiric's cast of the dye.—Whitlock. Manners of the English.

Mat. Good madam, hear the suit that Edith urges,
 With such submit beseeches.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act iv. sc. 3.

But thou art plac'd above me, thou art lord;
 From thee I can and must submit endure
 Check or reproof, and glad to scape so quit.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Instead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
 And lickd her lilly hands with fawning tong;
 As he her wronged innocence did weat.
 O how can beautie maister the most strong,
 And simple truth subdue avenging wrong!
 Whose yielded pryde and proud submission
 Still dreading death, when she had marked long,
 Her hart gan melt in great compassion;
 And drizling teares did shed for pure affection.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

Nath'lesse the knight, now in so needy case,
 Gan him entreat even with submission base,
 And humbly praid to let them in that night.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 3.

The birds, the beasts, and serpents, safe on board,
 With admiration look upon their lord,
 The righteous Noah; and with submissive fear
 Tremble his grave and awful voice to hear.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

— He in delight
 Both of her beautie and submissive charms
 Smil'd with superior love, as Jupiter
 On Juno smiles, when he impregns the clouds
 That shed May flowers.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Who rudely hayld her forth without remorse,
 Still holding up her suppliant hands on hye,
 And kneeling at his feete submissively.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
 Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
 Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
 But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story;
 He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
 With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky.—Herbert.

Some time he spent in speech; and then began Submissely prayer to the name of Pan.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

Mistake me not (I say againe) you that are worthy sena-tours, gentlemen, I honour your names and persons, and with all submissenesse, prostrate my selfe to your censure and service.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 140.

With a submit and discreet silence, passing over the miscarriages of our superiours, wait patiently upon the providence, and implore the assistance of him, who is the onely competent judge of such, and sovereign disposer of all things.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 29.

We are so bound to mind it, as to exercise our faith, and express our humility, in willingly believing, in submissively adoring those high mysteries which are revealed in the holy oracles concerning it.—Id. Defence of the Trinity.

To whom the goddess with the charming eyes,
 Soft in her tone, submissively replies:
 "Why, O my sovereign lord, whose frown I fear,
 And cannot unconcern'd, your anger bear;
 Why urge you thus my grief?"
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. x.

Wachum advanc'd, with all submit'sness
 T' accost them, but much more their business.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

But when the stern conditions were declar'd,
 A mournful whisper through the host was heard,
 And the whole hierarchy, with heads hung down,
 Submissively declin'd the ponderous proffer'd crown.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. ii.

The submitting to this office is a great instance of the Son's condescension.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 63.

From passages of this kind, in which Christ prays to his Father, and shews the deepest submission to his will, the unitarian argues, that Christ plainly acknowledges his inferiority.—Gilpin. Hints for Sermons, § 70.

In whatever light the woman might have represented this business, it had no bad effect on their behaviour, which was remarkably civil and submissive.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 5.

And being thence made sensible how much we need his mercy, submissively to apply for it, in the method which he hath prescribed, through the merits of our blessed Redeemer.
Abp. Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

SUB-NA'SCENT. Lat. Subnascens, pres. part. of Subnasci, to grow under.
 Growing under.

There is nothing more prejudicial to subnascent young trees, then, when newly trimmed and pruned, to have their wound poisoned with continual dripping.
Evelyn. Sylva, b. i. c. 20. § 9.

SUB-NEX, v. Lat. Sub-nexum, past part. of Sub-nectere. See CONNECT.
 To subjoin.

But being desirous in some sort to mollifie this absurdity, and to salve this sore, he subnexeth as touching evil things;
 these words.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 873.

SUB-OBSCURELY. Lat. Obscurus, dim, or dark. See OBSCURE.
 Dimly or darkly in a less degree.

The booke of nature, where, though subobscurely and in shadows, thou [God] hast expressed thine owne image.
Donne. Devotions, p. 218.

SUB-OCTAVE. } See SUBDUPLÉ.
SUBOCTUPLE. }

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congrus, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congrus into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well known palm;
 this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave.—Arbutnot. On Coins.

SUB-ORDINATE, adj. } Fr. Subordonner;

 tion; to arrange, rank, or station, under or below:
 inferior in degree.

This fashion of imperial grandeur is imitated by all inferior and subordinate sorts of it, as if it were a point of honour.—Cowley, Ess. 6. Of Greatness.

SUB

But then take in this caution to it; that although there be but one principal literal sense, yet others that are subordinate may be intended subordinately, and others that are true by proportion, or that first intention, may be true for many reasons, and every reason applicable to a special instance.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

— He resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge, and leave Unworshipt, unbey'd the throne supream, Contemptuous; and his next subordinate
Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spake.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

On the other side, to say yee cannot be saved by Christ without workes, is to adde things, not only not excluded, but commanded, as being in their place, and in their kind necessarie, and therefore subordinated unto Christ, by Christ himselfe, by whom the web of salvation is spun.
Hooker. A Discourse of Justification, &c.

Now, as I have before subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture, as their mistress; so there are certain inferior arts likewise subordinate to them; as under picture, mosaïque; under sculpture, plastique.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 62.

[This] may serve as a marvellous good example, for the dividing of one man's office into divers slips, and the subordinating of inferiors to discharge some part of the same.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii. § 15.

Because he [Solomon] prayed for wisdom in the first place, he added all things else, which were subordinately to be desired.—Cowley. Ess. Of Agriculture.

The subordinatenesse of the creature doth not take away from the right, from the thank, of the first mover.
Bp. Hall. The five Loaves and two Fishes.

— We clearly see
(As well as that pendent subordinance)
The nearly couching of each realtie,
And the creatours close propinquitie
To ev'ry creature.
More. Song of the Soul, pt. i. b. ii. s. 12.

In empire this true union is maintain'd,
Each power's by a subordinate restrain'd.—Yalden, Fab. 9.

As also [he, Aristotle, resolves] that there are con-causes which God makes use of, as subordinately cooperative with himself.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 151.

Their intention in thus subordinating the hypostases of their trinity, was plainly no other, than to exclude thereby a plurality of co-ordinate and independent gods, which they supposed an absolute co-equality of them would infer. And they made only so much subordination of them, as was both necessary to this purpose, and unavoidable.—Id. Ib. p. 596.

It [the mathematical or astrological fate] was afterwards adopted and fondly nursed by the stoicks in a way of subordination to their divine fate.—Id. Ib. p. 4.

Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason.—Spectator.

The subordinancy of the government changing hands so often makes an unsteadiness in the pursuits of the publick interests.—Temple.

For the truth of their general principle, that subordinate beings may be the immediate agents in many preternatural effects, analogy is clearly on their side.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

God hath bestowed for his own wise reasons, different talents on different men: to one man he hath given ten; to another only one.—Now this subordination, in fact, pervades all the works of God.—Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 61.

SUBORN, v. } Fr. Suborner; It. Subor- SUBORNA'TION. } nàre; Sp. Sub-ornar; Lat.
SUBORNER. } Sub-ornare, to provide, to furnish, (sub, and ornare, to deck, to dress.)

To provide, to prepare, to procure, to procure (the aid); to aid; to procure the co-operation; to persuade, to allure. See the quotation from Blackstone.

To suborn, is usually employed when the thing procured is bad.

This were in my mynde perillous, not onely for fere of subornacion & false instructiō of witness a thing easy to be done vpon the sight of that that is deposed ali redy before.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 211.

"And now it seemes, that she suborned hath
This crafty messenger with letters vaine,
To worke new woe and unprovided scath,
T' breaking of the band betwixt us twaine."
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

The Greekes escape, if they, for flight, the seas broad backe would take.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

"Guilty thou art of murder and of theft; Guilty of perjury and subornation."
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Therefore you are to inquire of wilful and corrupt perjury in any of the King's courts, yea of court-barons and the like, and that as well as the actors, as of the procurer and suborner.—Bacon. Charge to the Verge.

So men oppress'd, when weary of their breath,
Throw off the burthen, and suborn their death.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

For, if there be a just God in heaven, the portion of such men [both the swearers, and the suborners] will be, of all others, the most wretched and intolerable.
Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 18.

Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journey-work for thee,
And set th' a task, with subornation.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

Subornation of perjury is the offence of procuring another to take such a false oath, as constitutes perjury in the principal.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 10.

SUBPŒ'NA, n. } A writ at law; so called SUBPŒ'NA, v. } because disobedience to its command will be sub pœna, under penalty named in it.

The two little words sub pœnâ, which only appear at the fag end of a writ, have had the honour to form both a substantive and a verb; for every body knows what a sub pœnâ is, if he has not been sub-pœnaed.
Pegge. Anecdotes of the English Language, No. 11.

SUB-PRIOR. One under, and in place of, the prior; a lower or inferior prior.

The sousprior of hor hous the monekes chose echon,

SUB-RE'PTION. Fr. Subreption, subreptif, subreptive, (Cotgrave.) See SURREPTION.

And, lest there should be any subreption in this sacred business, it is ordered, that these ordinations should be no other than solemn.—Bp. Hall. A Modest Offer.

SUB-ROGATE, v. Fr. Subroger, surroguer; It. Surrogare. See TO SURROGATE.
To substitute, put or place instead of another.

The Christian day is to be subrogated into the place of the Jew's day: the resurrection of Christ and the redemption of man was a greater blessing than to create him.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, § 8.

If he [Saint Peter] had ever been bishop, he could not well lay down his office, or subrogate another, either to preside with him, or to succeed him.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

That Aratus his Zeus was neither a man born in Crete nor in Arcadia, but the maker and supreme governour of the whole world, is evident both from the antecedent and the subsequent verses.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 475.

Either let him found the worship of the Son upon what was antecedent to the incarnation, and then he may tolerably go on upon the Arian scheme; or if he chooses to found it entirely upon the subsequent powers, he is all over Socinian, and does not know it.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 375.

By which faculty, [reminiscence] we are also able, to take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence, in which they are past.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 3.

If Aristotle confesses that the winds, waters, and other inanimate things follow the heavenly circuit, why should we question the heliotrope's subsequence to the course of the sun?—Greenhill. Art of Embalming, p. 336.

The reason why men are so short and weak in governing, is because most things fall out to them accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceiv'd ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminous, after-applications of them to their purposes, or by framing their purposes to them.—South, vol. i. Ser. 8.

SUB-SERVE, v. } Lat. Subserviens, pres.
SUBSERVIENT. } part. of subservire, to serve SUBSERVIENCE. } under, (sub, and servire.)
SUBSERVIENCY. } To serve under; to be or act in subjection, or subordination; to serve as agent, as instrument; to be instrumental.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom,—vast, unwieldy, burdensom,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
By weakest subtleties, not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Wherefore the many gods of the intelligent pagans, were derived from one God, and but (as Plutarch somewhere calls them) the subservient powers, or ministers of the one supreme unmade Deity.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 543.

It is farther objected, that supposing the apostolate to be superior to the other ecclesiastical orders in power and office, yet it was but temporary, it being instituted by our Saviour in subservience to the present exigence and necessity of things, without any intention of deriving it down to the church in a continued succession.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

We shall first touch, and then further both illustrate and enforce the truth, by declaring upon what accoumpts, or in what respects our Lord is the Saviour of all men; as also by an application to practice, declarative of its usefulness and subserviency to the purposes of piety.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

Although God hath indeed no need of the wicked man, yet his wisdom and his mercy find frequent use for him, and render even his vices subservient to the benevolent purposes of providence.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

Use not therefore the preaching of the gospel, either for a matter of reproach to them, or of accusation against us: but solely in subservience of its important design, the reformation of yourselves.—Abp. Secker. Works, vol. i. p. 407.

What sorts of condescension and subserviency they would think it hard to have exacted from them.

SUB-SIDE, v. } Lat. Subsid-ere, to set or SUBSIDENCE. } settle down, (sub, and sidere.)
SUBSIDENCY. } To settle, to sink down;
SUBSIDING, n. } to sink or settle into a state of rest, of peace; to rest, to appease, to abate.

This we see in the subsidiency of this dreggish part of the world, the earth, if it may so properly be said to subside and be at the bottom, as in the midst of the more refined and subtle elements.—More. Antidote against Atheism, App.

Strabo in his first book seems to referr the straits or apertures of the Euxin and Mediterranean seas to the like separations made by the force of the sea, and attributes those great floods and inundations to the elevation and subsiding of the moles terrestres.—Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 190.

Soon as her funeral rites the prince had paid,
And rais'd a tomb in honour of the dead;
(The sea subsiding, and the tempests o'er)
He spreads the flying sails, and leaves the shore.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. vii.

The quicksilver that before stood at 29 inches (the atmosphere appearing then by a constant baroscope very light) would fall so low as to rest at 9 or 10 inches (for once I measured the subsidence beneath its former elevation.)

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 215.

As for the ground of the objection, that the air cannot be so well drawn out by our way, as by the subsiding of the mercury; though you may think that very clear, yet one that were very jealous of the reputation of the instrument I employ, may perhaps reasonably enough question it.

Id. Ib. p. 565.

They are the subsidiings of valleys or low lands, that make dents in the shore and creeks, small bays, and harbours, or little coves, &c.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

It is indeed very difficult to conceive how any thing which was not deposited here at its creation, or brought here by the diligence of man, could find its way to a place so severed from the rest of the world, by seas of immense extent, except the hypothesis that has been mentioned on another occasion be adopted, and this rock be supposed to have been left behind, when a large tract of country, of which it was part, subsided by some convulsion of nature, and was swallowed up in the ocean.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 15.

The mind, which during its hurry and violent attachment to pleasure, overlooked the sweet allurements of peace, being, by the subdual or subsidence of the more violent passions, now become attentive to, and sensible of, the soft and gentle impressions of tranquillity.

Warburton, vol. x. Ser. 32.

The citie was lost in the 364 year after the first foundation thereof, at what time (as appeareth by the rols of the subsidie booke) there were in Rome, to the number of 152580 free citizens.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 1.

Here more than in their books may lawyers find,
Both by what titles mistresses are ours,
And how prerogative these states devours,
Transferr'd from Love himself to womankind:
Who though from heart and eyes
They exact great subsides,
Forsake him who on them relies.

Donne. Valediction to his Book.

Whence we observe two things; first, that this Charnock was no man of estate, seeing seldom, if ever, a subsidy-man, is pressed for a souldier.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

I, not I alone, abstracted from Christ, nor I principally, and Christ onely in subsidiis, to facilitate that to me which I was not quite able thoroughly to perform without help, (which deceitful considerations drew on Pelagius himself, that was first onely for nature, at last to take in one after another, five subsidiaries more.)—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

If at any time some one phænomenon of nature appears, that crosseth any of these suppositions or hypotheses, or suits not with them, or is not salved by them, presently great pains is taken to supply that defect with some subsidiary supposition, that may stop that leak, and piece up the hypothesis.—Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 9.

If the practice was founded (as probably it was) upon this principle; that as soon as baptism became impaired, the use of the Eucharist ought to come in as subsidiary, or supplemental to it; it was a principle of weight, but not certain enough to create any strict obligation.

Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 506.

Subsidies were such as were imposed by parliament upon any of the staple commodities before mentioned, over and above the custuma antiqua et magna.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

It [a sinking fund] is a subsidiary fund, always at hand to be mortgaged in aid of any other doubtful fund, upon which money is proposed to be raised in any exigency of the state.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel in this uttermost distress,
My onely strength and stay: forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist?

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

But you invert the covenants of her trust,

The ideas of substances are such combinations of simple ideas, as are taken to represent distinct particular things subsisting by themselves; in which the supposed or confused idea of substance, such as it is, is always the first and chief.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 12.

No sensible qualities, as light, and colour, and heat, and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves absolutely consider'd, without a relation to our eyes, and other organs of sense.—Bentley, Ser. 2.

What is God, but the very being of all things that yet are not, and the subsistence of things that are.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 348.

A man bold and curious enough, for some years got the best part of his subsistence by descending to the bottom of the sea in an engine to seek for and recover goods lost in ship-wrecked vessels.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 345.

For what they have, their God and king they bless,
And hope they should not murmur had they less,
And if reduc'd subsistence to implore,
In common prudence they would pass your door.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

For the one God being the supreme magistrate, it [theocracy] subsisted in the worship of that God alone.

Warburton. Divine Logation, b. v. s. 2.

By the means of subsistence, I understand not the means of superfluous gratifications; but that present competency which every individual must possess in order to be in a capacity to derive a support from his industry in the proper business of his calling.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 25.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced.—Glanvill.

SUBSTITUTE, n.

SUBSTITUTION.

SUBSTITUTIVE.

(sub, and statuere, from statum, past part. of stare, to stand,) to put, place, or cause to stand under,
instead of.

To put or place instead of, to set or appoint in the place or office of.

That whan he made a gouernour
By wele of substitution,
Of prouince or of region,
He wolde first enquire his name,
And lete it openly proclame
What man he were, or euill or good.

Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And they dyd also substitute other whyche were known heads also.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 821.

For in the next general counsaill it may well happen, that this pope may be deposed, & another substitute in his rome, with whom the kinges highnes may be very wel cōtent.

Id. Id. p. 1427.

What a notorious piece of fraud is that of Rebecca, that while industrious Esau is ranging the woods and mountains to fulfill his father's commands and please his aged appetite, she should substitute Jacob with his both counterfeit hands and venison, to carry away the blessing intended by the good old man for his officious elder son Esau?

More. Defence of the Philos. Cabbala, Introd.

And so also was the custom in other countries, even

And substitute another from thy stock.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

Effects are attributed to the Jewish rites and sacrifices, which according to the nature of things cannot belong to them, otherwise than as substitutes and shadows of things more high in substance and efficacy.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 44.

I proceed to explain his subordination and substitution to Christ, in this part of his mediatorship for God with men.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

The principal's presence is thus removed from the scene of action, and opportunities are afforded for every species of idleness and fraud in the inferior substitutes.—Knox, Ess. 8.

Some of those prodigies of ignorance and folly, the Rabbin of the Jews who lived since the dispersion of the nation, thought all would be well if for tutelar deities they sub- stituted tutelar angels. From this substitution the system which I have described arose.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 29.

SUBSTRATED. } Lat. Substratum, past SUBSTRATUM. } part. of Substernere, to spread or strew under.

Strewed or laid under, (met.) substratum is—a something supposed to be laid or placed under, as a support for, or to maintain or hold together certain accidents or qualities.

We have more than once had the bottom of a retort melted yet not broken, the melted glass being supported by the substrated sand.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 222.

And his notion of the divine immensity is, that it is infinite expansion, or infinite space, requiring an infinitely expanded substratum, or subject; which subject is the very substance of God, so expanded.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 50.

The complex ideas that our names of the species of sub- stances properly stand for, are collections of such qualities as have been observed to co-exist in an unknown substra- tum, which we call substance.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 6.

SUBSTRUCTION. } Lat. Substructio, from SUBSTRUCTURE. } substruere, to build under.

A building under; a building of the foundation, (sc.) that upon which the superstructure is to be raised.

Therefore that we may found our habitation firmly, we must first examine the bed of earth (as I may term it,) upon which we will build; and then the underfillings, or sub- struction, as the ancients did call it.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 17.

The Reverend Daniel Barbaro describes us all the kinds of them, and calls this in particular (and which confirms this division) the concealed part, or fundatio in imo: and then by this elegant distinction defines structura to be that of fronts; instruction, that of the middle parts; and sub- struction of the lower.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

A substructure of their chronology, geography, and history.
Harris. On the 53d chapter of Isaiah.

SUB-STYLAR. The quotation explains the meaning. See STYLE.

Erect the style perpendicularly over the subtilar line, so as to make an angle with the dial-plane equal to the elevation of the pole of your place.—Moxon. Mech. Ex.

SUBSULTIVE. } Lat. Subsultus, past part.

SUBSULTORY. }

SUBSULTORILY. } of Subsilire, to make short leaps.

Making short leaps or jumps; bounding, springing, short distances.

The inordinate and subsultory motion of the spirits doth more hasten to going forth, and doth prey upon the body more than the constant and equal.

Bacon. History of Life & Death.

The spirits do spread themselves even, and move not subsultorily, for that will make the parts close and pliant.

Id. Natural History, § 326.

The earth, I was told, moved up and down like the boiling of a pot, to use their own expression. This sort of subsultive motion is ever accounted the most dangerous.

Berkeley. Letters, Ex. 64.

SUB-SUME, v. Lat. Sub, and sumere, to take.
Hammond uses the word as equivalent to—
To subjoin.

Always upon terms of spiritual exultancy, what great things God hath done for their souls, how he hath fitted them for himself; never with humbled bended knees in acknowledgment of unworthiness with St. Paul, who cannot name that word, sinners, but must straight subsume in a parenthesis, of whom I am the chief.

Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

SUB-TARTA'REAN. Sub, and tartareus.
Being, living or abiding under Tartarus.

The queen assents; and from th' infernal bowers
Invokes the sable subtartarean powers,
And those who rule th' inviolable floods,
What mortals name the dread Titanian gods.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

SUB-TEND, v. } Lat. Subtendere, to stretch
SUBTENSE. } under, sub, and tendere.

To stretch, to reach, or run along under.

An equal subtense (you say) subtends an equal periphery, a greater a greater, and a lesser a less. Therefore (viz. according to Euclid's definition of proportionals,) subtenses are proportional.—Barrow. Mathematical Lectures, Lect. 22.

Nor doth every one, who hath an idea of a rectangular triangle presently understand, that the square of the subtense is equal to the squares of both the sides.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 653.

Though the apparent magnitude of objects is supposed to depend upon the angle they subtend at our eye, nevertheless our familiarity with them changes our estimation of their bulk.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 11.

SUBTERFUGE. Fr. Subterfuge; It. Sotterfugio; Lat. Subterfugere, to fly under covert, covertly, privily.

A covert flight, escape, evasion; a pretence or pretext—to escape or evade a difficulty.

The king cared not for subterfuges, but would stand envie, and appear in any thing that was to his mind; which made envie still grow upon him more vniuersall, but lesse daring. Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 199.

The fifth and last is rather a subterfuge than an objection. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 14.

This subterfuge would involve the makers in very perplexing difficulties.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 137.

Now stern Æneas waves his weighty spear Against his foe, and thus upbraids his fear:
"What farther subterfuge can Turnus find?
What empty hopes are harbour'd in his mind."

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xii.

Let us not defraud ourselves of the benefit of the dreadful example, by the miserable subterfuge of a rash judgment upon our neighbours, and an invidious comparison of their deservings with our own.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 13.

SUBTERRANEAN, n. Fr. Subterrain; It. Sotterraneo; Sp. Subterraneo; Lat. Subterraneus, (sub, and terra.) See the quotation from Boyle.
SUBTERRANEAL, adj. Being under ground or earth; put, placed, or situate under or beneath the surface of the earth.

Mom. This is a subterranean fiend, Plutus, in this dialect term'd riches, or the god of gold.

Carew. Cælum Britannicum.

They [metals] are wholly subterranean; whereas plants are part above earth, and part under earth.

Bacon. Natural History, § 603.

We see that in subterranean there are, as the fathers of their tribes, brimstone and mercury.—Id. Ib. § 354.

And therefore I fear we commonly consider *subterranean*ities, not in contemplations sufficiently respective unto the creation.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

But this upon-the-by, being not obliged to set down here the grounds of my paradoxical conjecture about the effects of subterranean fires and heats since I here lay no stress upon it.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 52.

Mr. Bushel continued these battery-works four years night and day before his hopes could give him any happy assurance that the mineral beds of those subterranean riches lay fast locked in those barren rocks.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

A consequence so dismal to prevent,
Water and air are still (as said) intent
To mount or fall, this way or that to fly,
Seek subterranean vaults, or climb the sky.

Blackmore. Creation, b. v.

Subterranean places are not by this name, and indeed cannot in reason be supposed to be beneath the whole body of the earth, but only the superficial parts of it.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 342.

Calling him in the starry heauen and æther, Jupiter; in the air, Juno; in the winds, Æolus; in the sea, Neptune; in the earth and subterranean parts, Pluto.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 308.

Josephus mentions vast *subterranean*es in some of the hills in that part of Canaan called Galilee, and in Trachonites; and says that they extended far under ground, and consisted of wonderful apartments.

Bryant. Analysis of Ancient Mythology, vol. iii. p. 503.

It may be conceived that the souls of those who died in that dreadful visitation might from that circumstance have peculiar apprehensions of themselves as the marked victims of divine vengeance, and might peculiarly need the consolation which the preaching of our Lord in the subterranean regions afforded to these prisoners of hope.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

Therefore I am return'd, lest confidence

Of my success with Eve in Paradise

Deceive ye to persuasion over-sure

Of like succeeding here.—Milton. Par. Regained, b. ii.

— But if now

You should (as cruel fathers do) proclaim

Your right, and tyrant-like usurp the glory

Of my peculiar honours, not deriv'd

From successary, but purchas'd with my blood,

Then I must stand first champion for my self

Against all interposers.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act i. sc. 2.

The battle then at Stoke, so fortunately struck,

(Upon king Henry's part, with so successful luck,

As never till that day he felt his crown to cleave

Unto his temples close.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

He took a course, which since successfully

Great men have often taken, to espy

The counsels, or to break the plots of foes.

Donne. The Progress of the Soul, s. 1.

An opinion of the successfulness of the work is as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises.

Hammond.

— For how art thou a king

But by faire sequence and succession?

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

— Cassibulan, thine vnkle,

(Famous in Cæsars prayses, no whit lesse

Then in his feats deseruing it) for him,

And his succession, granted Rome a tribute,

Yeerely three thousand pounds.

Id. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 1.

Noble patricians, patrons of my right,

Defend the iustice of my cause with armes.

And countrey-men, my louing followers,

Pleade my successiue title with your swords.

Id. Titus Andronicus, Act i. sc. 1.

And what an empire can, the same this island brings:

Her pedigrees to show her right successive kings,

Her chronicles, and can as easily rehearse,

And with all foreign parts to have had free commerce.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

As brought into her mind the eagle's prophecies;

Of that so dreadfull plague, which all great Britain swept,

From that which highest flew, to that which lowest crept,

Before the Saxon thence the Britain should expel,

And all that thereupon successively befel.—Id. Ib. s. 2.

The isle [Meroe] was subject unto a ladie or queene named Candace, a name that for many yeeres already went from one queene to another successively.

Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 29.

So that all the notion we have of duration without relation to something that endures, is a fiction that the understanding takes up, and the image whereby it conceives it, is partly by the successiveness of its own operations, and partly by those external measures that it finds in motion, rendered a successive nature, and pars post partem.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 119.

Then shall the end come, to wit when the gospel having been preached through all the cities of Judæa successlessly, the Apostles turn to the Gentiles.

Hammond. Works, vol. iii. p. 121.

Mops. Whether you please that sylvan scene to take,

Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make:

Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,

Whose mouth the curling vines have overspread?

Dryden. Virgil. Past. 5.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-raised Jove from his dark prison freed
(Those weights took off that on his planet hung)
Will gloriously the new laid work succeed.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

— "Since lucre was your trade,
Succeeding times such dreadful gaps have made,
'Tis dangerous climbing."
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

If it [the Bolonian stone calcined] be but exposed to the sun-beams (to which I have found other strong lights succedaneous) it will not only in a few minutes acquire a luminousness, but for some time after retain it in the dark.
Boyle. Works. vol. iii. p. 315.

Swell'd with our late successes on the foe,
Which France and Holland wanted power to cross,
We urge an unseen fate to lay us low,
And feed their envious eyes with English loss.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Whom, thus persisting, when she could not bring
To leave the wolf, and to believe her king,
She gave her up, and fairly wish'd her joy
Of her late treaty with her new ally:
Which well she hop'd would more successful prove,
Than was the pigeon's and the buzzard's love.
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

Towers. I shou'd be willing, sir, to think it was a young man's rashness, or perhaps the rage of a successful rival: yet he might have spar'd some words.
Id. Amboyna, Act iii. sc. 1.

Scholastic may stand for Catholic, as I perceive it often does with you also, if you think the Catholic faith may, under that borrowed name, be more safely or more successfully attacked.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 62.

Thus by reflecting on the appearing of various ideas one after another in our understandings, we get the notion of succession.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14.

For a man looking upon a body really moving, perceives yet no motion at all, unless that motion produces a constant train of successive ideas: v. g. a man becalm'd at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun or sea, or ship, a whole hour together, and perceive no motion at all in either.—Id. Ib.

The scheme of successive angry providences, by which God must govern a wicked world, would be so terrible and amazing a sight, that, in pity to us, God has shortened and bounded our view.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

The parable relates to a quite different matter, and speaks not of those that came into the vineyard together, but of those that came in successively, perhaps many generations one after another.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 19.

When I used a bulk divers times as great, in a stronger, but proportionably less accurate balance, I found not the experiment successful.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 789.

A gentleman whose nation being French, his vice little younger than himself, humour extremely choleric, and his apprehensions of the successlessness of his endeavours very great, obliged him to vanquish indispositions numerous and great enough to make that concurrence very frequent in one single person. Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 20.

Qu. Then that I may oblige you more to it,
I here declare you rightful successor,
And heir immediate to my crown.
Dryden. Secret Love, Act v.

Henry the eighth, the issue of this marriage, succeeded to the crown by clear indisputable hereditary right, and transmitted it to his three children in successive order.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 3.

Henry earl of Richmond, a title the most remote and unaccountable that was ever set up, and which nothing could have given success to, but the universal detestation of the then usurper Richard.—Id. Ib.

But however impossible it may be to find an adequate expression, the fact is clear; that counterfeits of virtue, as well as piety, have been sought out with a bad design, and too successfully.—Abp. Secker. vol. ii. Ser. 24.

Of the same kind [a tax upon the transference of property from the dead to the living] is the Dutch tax upon successions. Collateral successions are taxed according to the degree of relations, from five to thirty per cent. upon the whole value of the succession.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 2.

We stood off and along the shore till the 12th, and successively saw a remarkable hill near Santo Espirito, then Cape St. Thomas, and then an island just without Cape Frio.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

We know what to understand by it, when after a successful insult on religion, the reader is intreated to believe that you have a strong reserve; but till the door of liberty be set a little wider, you have not room to display it.
Warburton. Divine Legation, Ded. (1738.)

The regular fall admits also another mode of variety by forming itself into what may be called the successive fall, in which the water instead of making one continued shoot, falls through a succession of different stories.
Gilpin. Tour. vol. i. s. 8.

SUC-CENTOR. An under or inferior centor.

In his proctorship succeeded Joh. Maplet, M. A. who served out the remaining part of the year, and in his succentorship [succeeded] Rob. Joyner of Oxford.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

SUCCINCT. } Fr. Succinct; It. Succinto;

SUCCINCTNESS. } past part. of succingere, to gird under, (sub, and cingere.)

Girt; having or leaving nothing loose or negligent; compact, concise, compendious.

A strict and succinct style is that, where you can take away nothing without losse, and that losse to be manifest.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

— Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkl'd with gold.
His habit fit for speed succinct, and held Before his decent steps a silver wand.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Thus, my lord, as succinctly as I could digest it into the narrow bounds of an epistle, I have sent your lordship this small survey of the Latin, or first Roman tongue.
Howell, b. ii. Let. 58.

Long victory sate dormant: soon she shakes
Her drowsy wings, and follows to the war,
With speed succinct.—J. Philips. Cerealia, (1706.)

To translate him line for line is impossible, because the Latin is naturally a more succinct language than either the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.—Dryden. Theocritus, Pref.

These soundings, when well ascertained, being of great use in determining the position of the ship, and we having tried them more frequently, and in greater depths, and with more attention, than I believe hath been done before us; I shall recite our observations as succinctly as I can.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 6.

He [John Pell] hath also succinctly and clearly demonstrated the second and tenth books of Euclid.
Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. ii.

In fine, brevity and succinctness of speech, is that, which in philosophy or speculation we call maxim, and first principle; in the counsels and resolves of practical wisdom, and the deep mysteries of religion, oracle; and lastly in matters of wit, and the finenesses of imaginations, epigram.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

A tale should be judicious, clear, succinct;
The language plain, and incidents well link'd.
Cowper. Conversation.

You have now, sir, the whole of his lordship's system, together with his principal topics for the support of it; both indeed very succinctly delivered.
Warburton. Bolingbroke's Philosophy, Let. 2.

SUCCOUR, v. } Fr. Secourir, secours; It.

SUCCOURER. } Soccorrer; Lat. Succurrere,
SUCCOURLESS. } succursus, to run under, (sub, and curre.) sc.—to support, sustain, assist.

Our old authors write the noun socourse.
To assist, to aid, to help, to relieve.

& that hom ne com no socour hii seie al so wel,
So that, as hii nede moste, hii zolde vp then castel.
R. Gloucester, p. 568.

Henry for his trespas did fulle grete honour
To the martir Saynt Thomas, for mercy & socour.
R. Brunne, p. 142.

— "This song, I have herd say,
Was maked of our blisful Lady fre,
Hire to salve, and eke hire for to prey
To ben our help, and socour whan we dey."
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,461.

— "O sweet cloth, while Jupiter it iest,
Take my soule, vnbind me of this vnrest,
I have fulfilled of fortune all the course,"
And thus alas, withouten his socourse, Twentie time eswouned hath she than.
Id. The Legende of Dido.

The wilde fader thus deuoreth
His owne flesh, which none socoureth,
And that was cause of mochel care.—Gower. C. A. b. viii.

And thus alone there he laie
Clepoude, and criende all the daie
For socoure and deliuerance.
Id. Ib. b. v.

The malicious murderer, the man of sinne, & body of the diuel, with his deuouring locoustes, robbe ye poore people of their sweat, labours, trauaile, and nessary liuing, sparing neither sicke nor succourlesse.—Bate. Image, pt. ii.

Not alway but sometime thou shalt feele thy fayth without the outward deede, as in great aduersitie and persecution when the deuill assaulteth thee with desperation, and layeth thy sinnes before thee, & would beare thee in had that God had cast the away and left the succourles, for thy synnes sake.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 418.

How oft do they [angels] their silver bowers leave
To come to succour us that succour want!
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

And a strong navy likewise doth purvey,
To scour the seas, and keep the British coast,
Fearing from France fresh succours every day,
To aid queen Marg'ret, which perplex'd him most.
Drayton. The Miseries of Q. Margaret.

That ye receive her [Phebe] in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and of my self also.—Rom. xvi. 2.

There are xvi men allotted within yo' L.'s charge for the succourse and aide of this towne, as nede should require.
Lodge. Bedford to Shrewsbury, (1565.)

And farre away, amid their rakehell bands,
They spide a lady left all succourlesse,
Crying, and holding up her wretched hands.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

— His ship, Joue strooke
With red-hot flashes, peece-meale in the seas,
And all his friends and souldiers, succourlesse Perisht but he.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

The latter brood, who just began to fly,
Sick-feather'd, and unpractis'd in the sky,
For succour to their helpless mother call;
She spread her wings: some few beneath them crawl;
She spread them wider yet, but could not cover all.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

What conflagrations, earthquake, ravage, floods,
Have turn'd thy cities into stony wilds;
And succourless, and bare, the poor remains
Of wretches forth to nature's common cast!
Thompson. Liberty.

The devotion of life or fortune to the succour of the poor is a height of virtue, to which humanity has never arisen by its own power.—Tatler, No. 4.

Soft airs and gentle heavings of the wave
Impel the fleet, whose errand is to save,
To succour wasted regions, and replace
The smile of opulence in sorrow's face.—Cowper. Charity.

SUCCULENT. } Fr. Succulent; Lat. Succulentus, full of juice, (succus plenus.)
SUCCULENCE. }

Juicy, sappy; full of juice or moisture.

Those [figges] which be ripe, have small graines within them: their succulent substance besides, when they begin to ripen, is white like milke: but when they are perfectly ripe, it is of the colour of honie.
Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 19.

I elsewhere bring very good and recent authority to prove that it [coral] is oftentimes found very succulent, and does propagate its species as well as other shrubs.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 59.

— On our account has Jove
Indulgent to all moons some succulent plant Allotted that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

As the leaves are not succulent, little more juice is pressed out of them than they have imbibed.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 18.

SUCCUMB, v. } Lat. Succumbere, to lie
SUCCUBA. } under (sub, and cumbere.)
SUCCUBUS. } Succuba, or succubus; It.
Succubo, one who lies under. Incubus, one who lies upon.

To lie under, to lie down; to sink under, give way to; yield or submit.

But in huge woes inuolu'd with intricating art
Surcharg'd with sorrowes I succumb and senselesly do smart.
Stirling. Aurora, El. 3.

— King Henry the second
Sonne of dame Maude, the emprise of high fame,
Would oft report, that his ancient grandame,
Though seeming in shape a woman naturall,
Was a feend of the kind that (succubæ) some call.
Mirrouir for Magistrates, p. 329.

The glory we did lately get,
The fates command us to repeat;
And to their wills we must succumb,
Quocunque trahunt, 'tis our doom.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

One of their own fables is here mythologized and explained, of a church yard carcass raised and set a strutting by the inflation of some hellish succubus within.
Warburton. On Prodiges, p. 63.

SUCCUSSATION. } Fr. Succussation; Lat.
SUCCUSSION. } Succussare, formed upon succusus, the past part. of succutere, to shake under.

Applied to—
The shaking, jolting, of a trotting horse.
Succussion is (generally)—a shaking.

And this is true whether they move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tollutation or ambling; or per diametrum, lifting one foot before, and the cross foot behind, which is succussation or trotting.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 6.

They rode, but authors having not Determined whether pace or trot, (That is to say, whether tollutation, As they do term't, or succussation) We leave it.

Reach her, about must and about it go;
And what the hill's suddenness resists, win so.
Donne, Sat. 3.

This is the proper wit of dialogue or discourse, and consequently of the drama, where all that is said is to be supposed the effect of sudden thought.
Dryden. Letter to Sir R. Howard.

For he was guilty of sin in not believing the angel, but it was a sin of the slighter kind, a sin of infirmity, which he was let into by the surprize and suddenness of the thing, while his heart was sincere, and his intentions honest and upright.—Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 139.

— That thou art here beyond all hope,
All thought; that all at once thou art before me,
And with such suddenness hast hit my sight,
Is such surprize, such mystery, such ecstasy!
It hurries all my soul, and stuns my sense.
Congreve. The Mourning Bride, Act ii.

In the first ages of Christianity it is astonishing to read of the sudden change in the morals of men which it wrought.
Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 3.

Yet the design, after infinite preparations for the speedy accomplishment of it, was suddenly defeated, without any change in the purpose of Julian, or in that of the ministers he employed.—Warburton. Works, vol. x. Disc. 29.

The suddenness of the effect can be accounted for only by a cause which can operate suddenly, the accidental variation of the seasons.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

So well he wood her and so well he wrought her,
With humble service, and with daily sute,
That at the last unto his will he brought her.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

As that life-blood which from the heart is sent,
In beauty's field pitching his crimson tent,
In lovely sanguine sutes the lilly cheek, Whilst it for a resting place doth seek;
And changing oftentimes with sweet delight,
Converts the white to red, the red to white.
Drayton. Rosamond to King Henry.

"Y^e peers!" I cry, "who press to gain a heart,
Where dread Ulysses claims no future part:
Rebate your loves, each rival suit suspend,
Till this funereal web my labours end."
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

The winds within the quivering branches play'd,
And dancing trees a mournful music made.
The place itself was suiting to his care,
Uncouth and savage, as the cruel fair.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable:
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

If therefore, in the nature of things, we can discover a world of mutual suitabilities of this to that, and of one thing to another, it will be a sufficient argument that they all proceed from some wise cause that had an universal idea of their natures in his mind, and saw how such a thing would suit such a thing, before ever he actually adapted them one to another.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 4.

For as there is no pleasure in acting coldly upon suitable objects, so there is pain and trouble in acting vigorously upon unsuitable ones. And therefore to make heaven itself a happiness to us, 'tis necessary not only that we should act vigorously upon the objects of it, but that we should so act from a suitableness of temper to them.—Id. Ib. pt. i. c. 2.

You have taken upon yourselves the profession of a holy and pure religion, which makes over to its followers inestimable privileges and benefits. This is your calling, your vocation. Oh! let your lives bear some suitableness thereto. Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 9.

Of his hauinge.
Id. Ib. b. vii.

He sent many mē of warr to Saynt Omers, to Ayre, and to Saynt Venaunt, and purueyed sufficiency for all the fortresses fronting on Flanders.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 51.

"Indeed," quoth he, "through fowle intemperaunce
Frayle men are oft captiv'd to covetise:
But would they thinke with how small allowaunce
Untroubled nature doth herselfe suffise,
Such superfluities they would despise,
Which with sad cares empeach our native ioyes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Insomuch as the over-excessive speeches the poets accustomably do use were not sufficient enough to express the peaceable reign of that time.—North. Plutarch, p. 60.

The author, with pity, imputes to them their being led away in blindness of the time, and errors of their fancies:
as all other the most divine philosophers (not lightened by the true word) have been, although (mere human suffi- ciencies only considered) some of them were sublimate far above earthly conceit.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1. Illust.

But now they swarm; and with fresh troops supply'd
Came rolling on, and rush from every side.
Nor Juno, who sustain'd his arms before,
Dares with new strength suffice th' exhausted store.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. ix.

But now the impatient reader will be apt to say, "If so many and various graces go to the making up a hero, what mortal shall suffice to bear his character?"

Pope. Of the Dunciad.

Methinks, Casaubon turns it handsomely upon that supercilious critic, and silently insinuates that he himself was sufficiently vain-glorious, and a boaster of his own knowledge.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

The man that stands up for the natural sufficiency of the soul without the spirit of God in order to its own happiness, it is no wonder if he receives not the things of the spirit of God.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

The share of sensual pleasures, that a man of my age can promise himself, is hardly worth attention: he should be sated, he will be soon disabled; and very little reflection surely will suffice to make his habits of this kind lose their power over him, in proportion at least as his power of indulging them diminishes.
Bolingbroke. Of Retirement & Study, Let. 2.

The too common opinion, that he was to appear as a temporal prince, would sufficiently keep them from being partial in his favour, since he appeared in a manner so different.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 25.

SUFFLAMINATE, v. Lat. Sufflamen, from sub, and flamen;—and sufflaminare, to stop or stay (flando) by blowing, by the wind. Generally—
To stop, to stay, to hold or keep back; to hinder, to impede.

God could prevent the beginnings of wicked designs; he could supplant them in their first onsets; he could any where sufflamine and subvert them; but he rather winketh for a time.—Barrow. Sermon on the Gunpowder Treason.

SUFFOCATIVE. } obliis faucibus interstinguere; to quell or kill by pressing the jaws together.

To close or stop the breath or power of breathing; to choke, to stifle.

Slaine, I call heere, whosoever he be, man, woman, or childe, that violently commeth to his death, whether it be by knife, poyson, cord, drowning, burning, suffocation, or otherwise, be it by his owne fault or default, or by any other.—Smith. Commonwealth, b. ii. c. 23.

All struck with lice so numberless they lie,
The dust grown quick in every place doth creep,
The sands their wants do secondly supply,
As they at length would suffocate the deep.
Drayton. Moses his Birth & Miracles.

Ferd. What sublunary mischief can predominate
A wise man thus? or doth thy friendship play
(In this antipathous extreme) with mine,
Lest gladness suffocate me? I, I, I do feel
My spirits turn'd to fire, my blood to air.
Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the choaking.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act i. sc. 3.

Thinke of that, I that am as subject to heate as butter; a man of continuall dissolution, and thaw: it was a miracle to scape suffocation.

Id. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iii. sc. 5.

Doubtful his death: he suffocated seem'd To most.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

From rain, after great frosts in the winter, glandulous tumours and suffocative catarrhs proceed.

Arbuthnot. On Air.

We all desire the fresh air we breath, but must we never walk into the fields to enjoy a purer draught until almost suffocated by the smoke of town?

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

The theatre too small shall suffocate
Its squeez'd contents, and more than it admits Shall sigh at their exclusion, and return Ungratified.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

SUFFOSSION. Lat. Suffossio, from suffossum, past part. of suffodere, to dig under, (sub, and fodere.)

A digging under or beneath.

And, to make it good, what should I need to lay before your eyes all those turbulent effects, that in our day have followed malicious superstition; those instigations of public invasions; those conspiracies against malignant sovereignty; those suffossions of walls, &c.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

suffragari, to support, to sustain, to assist. (See Vossius and Martinius.) Suffrage, (met.)— Support or assistance (given by vote); vote, or voice in favour; subsidy.

Suffragan, or suffragant,—acting, assisting, subserving.

To suffragate,—to give suffrage or vote; to vote.

He [Henry the 5] made a riche tumber for Richard the 2. and causid suffragies to be ordenid for hym.
Leland. Collectanea, vol. ii. p. 490.

If any man sinne he shal lie in the paynes of purgatory, untill he be deliuered thence by masse pence, the popes pardon or certaine other suffragies, but not without money you may be sure.—Fryth. Workes, p. 17.

What soeuer is of honor or profite, which cōfirmation and the other coniuations, also they haue now committed to their suffragans: because they them selue haue no leysure to minister such things.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 152.

Whither (at once) doth presently repair
The spiritual lords and temporal, who would have Him take the crown; who far more ready are
To give, than he their suffrages to crave.
Drayton. The Miserie of Queen Margaret.

He spake, and all the gods gave eare: Heare how I stand inclinde;
That god nor goddesse may attempt t' infringe my soveraigne minde,
But all give suffrage; that with speed I may these discords end.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

If I should let my pen loose to the suffragant testimonies whether of antiquity, or of modern divines and reformed churches, I should try your patience, and instead of a letter send you a volume.—Bp. Hall. Remaines, p. 302.

Hoping to find them more friends and suffragants to the virtues and modesty of sober women, than enemies to their beauty.—Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 118.

He was by the Pope made Episcopus Pissinensis (some poor pitifull bishoprick, so that one would scarce trouble himself to find it out to have the profit thereof), and therewith held the suffragane-ship under Henry Beauford Bishop of Lincoln.—Fuller. Worthies. Cumberland.

That method and manner once revealed, as it stands so revealed to us by Moses, carries a very great congruity to reason; which though it cannot at first discover the method or order, yet it cannot choose but suffragate to the reasonableness and convenience thereof, being so discovered.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 291.

For he [Bacon] did not use and employ experiments for the erecting of his theories: but having arbitrarily pitch'd his theories, his manner was to force experience to suffra- gate, and yield countenance to his precarious propositions.
Glanvill. Ess. 3.

The synod in the Low Countries is held at Dort; the most of their suffragators are already assembled.
Bp. of Chester to Abp. Usher, p. 67.

I am already justified by the sentence of the best, and most discerning prince in the world by the suffrage of all unbiass'd judges, and, above all, by the witness of my own conscience, which abhors the thought of such a crime.
Dryden. Pref. to Tyrannic Love.

Mar. 2. Godfrey earl of Montgomery now about to return to his country, was then created [Mast. of Arts] with liberty allowed him to suffragate in congregat. and convocat.
Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. ii.

July 18. Michael Ward, Doct. of Div. of Dublin and Cambridge, was incorporated in the said degree, with liberty given him to suffragate in congreg. and convoc.—Id. Ib.

The act of parliament for the suffragan bishops, under which several were made in the last century, and others may now, exemplify fully the possibility of bishops without peerages, and consistory courts.
Secker. Letter to H. Walpole, (1750.)

SUFFRAGINOUS. See SUFFRAGE. Of, or pertaining, or belonging to the joints of the hind legs, (suffragines.)

The bought of the fore-legs [in the elephant] not directly backward, but laterally and somewhat inward; but the hough or suffraginous flexure behinde rather outward.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 1.

SUFFUMIGATION. Fr. Suffumigation; It.
Suffumicazione; Lat. Suffumigatio; from Suffu- migare, to smoke under or beneath. See FUME.

A smoaking or fuming under; a reek, an exhalation.

Old witches, sorceresses,
That vsen exorsisations
And eke subfumigations,
And clerkes eke, which conne well
All this magicke naturell.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

Hippocrates moreover was of this opinion, that a suffumi- gation made therewith [garlick] fetcheth downe the afterbirth of women newly delivered and brought to bed.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 6.

Very small things will alter them [our spirits] even when we are awake; the mere change of weather and various temper of the aire, a little reek or suffumigation.
More. Of Enthusiasm, § 7.

Evans made answer, that he did not at the time of his invocation make any suffumigation, at which the spirits were vexed.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon, vol. i.

SUFFUSION, v. } Fr. Suffusion; It. Suffusione; SUFFUSION. } Lat. Suffusio, from suffusum, past part. of suffundere, to pour under.

To pour; to spread by pouring; to spread;
to overspread with any thing liquid or fluid;
generally, to overspread.

And gan recomfort her, in her rude wyse,
With womannish compassion of her plaint,
Wiping the teares from her suffused eyes,
And bidding her sit downe to rest her faint
And wearie limbs awhile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

— But thou
Revisit'st not these eyes, that rowle in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn,
So thick a drop serene hath quencht their orbes,
Or dim suffusion veild.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Ah, then! instead of love enliven'd cheeks,
Of sunny features, and of ardent eyes
With flowing rapture bright, dark looks succeed, Suffus'd and glaring with untender fire.
Thomson. Spring.

He [Plutarch] being deeply tinctured, as it were, with the suffusions of it, every thing which he look'd upon, seem'd to him coloured with it.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 224.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye:
And when his chariot downward drives to bed,
His ball is with the same suffusion red.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

— Her cheeks were pale to view,
And her fell eyes suffus'd with gory dew.
Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. ii.

Medora still (while tears his cheeks suffuse)
The dear remembrance of his lord renews.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xviii.

SUG, i. e. Suck or Sucker.

At which time, many of them [trout] have sticking on them sugs, or trout-lice; which is a kind of a worm, in shape like a clove, or pin with a big head,—and sticks close to him, and sucks his moisture; those, I think, the trout breeds himself.—Walton. Angler, b. i. c. 4.

SUGAR, v. } Fr. Sucre; It. Zucchero; Sp.
SUGAR, n. } Azucar; Lat. Saccharum. In SUGARY. } Arabick, Saccar. Vossius says the name Saccharum was given (to what is now called sugar) because it resembled the kind of honey spoken of by Pliny. See the quotation from Pliny, and also that from Grainger.

Sugared is applied (met.)—sweetened, honied, luscious, alluring.

“For it perauenture may right so befall,
That they be bound by nature to deceive,
And spinne, and weep, and sugre strow on gall.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

But, good nece, alway to stint his wo,
So let your daunger sugred ben alite,
That of his death ye be not all to wite.—Id. Troyl. & Cres.

Like as a sick mā feleth no sweetenes in suger.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 74.

Her [Mary of Scotland] cunning and sugred entertainment of all men that come to her, whereby she gets both credit and intelligence.
Burnet. Records, vol. ii. pt. ii. b. iii. No. 12.

As for sugar there is of it in Arabia; but the best commeth out of India. A kind of honey it is, gathered and candied in certaine canes; white this is like gum [arabick] and brittle betweene a mans teeth. The graines hereof when they are at the biggest, exceed not a filberd nut, and serve only for physick.—Holland. Plinie, b. xii. c. 8.

And those last deadly accents, which like swords
Did wound my heart, and rend my bleeding chest,
With those sweet sugred speeches doe compare,
The which my soul first conquerd and possest.
Spenser. Daphnida, s. 3.

Some bathed kisses and did soft embrew
The sugred licour through his melting lips.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

Here then is God's method of curing mankind, first, goodness or inviting us to him by sugared words, by the placid arguments of temporal favour, and the propositions of excellent promises.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

We are more sottish than the Trojans, if we retain our Helena, any one beloved lust, a painted devil, any sugared temptation; with (not the hazard, but) the certainty of having such horrid miseries, such invaluable losses.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 19.

And with the sugrie sweete thereof allure
Chast ladies eares to fantasies impure.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

Sam. Why you may take a maid.
Hyl. Where? can you tell me?
Or if 'twere possible I might get a maid,
To what use should I put her? look upon her,
Dandle her upon my knee, and give her sugar-sops?
Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act ii. sc. 2.

For if sugar produce in us the ideas which we call whiteness and sweetness, we are sure there is a power in sugar to produce those ideas in our minds, or else they could not have been produced by it.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 31.

Sugar is twice mentioned by Chaucer, who flourished in the fourteenth century; and succeeding poets, down to the middle of the last, use the epithet sugared, whenever they would express any thing uncommonly pleasing; since that time, the more elegant writers seldom admit of that adjective in a metaphorical sense; but herein perhaps they are affectedly squeamish.—Grainger. Note on the Sugar-cane.

In the afternoon, I received a message from the officer, acquainting me that Teabooma the chief was come with a present consisting of a few yams and sugar-canes.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 8.

SUGESCENT. Lat. Sugens, pres. part. of sug-ere, to suck.

Sucking.

None of the animals, which are not designed for that nourishment, ever offer to suck, or to seek out any such food. What is the conclusion, but that the sugescent parts of animals are fitted for their use, and the knowledge of that use put into them?—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

SUGGEST, v. } Fr. Suggerer, suggestion;
SUGGESTER. } It. Suggerire; Sp. Sugerir; SUGGESTION. } Lat. Sug-gerere, sug-gestum.

To bear or carry, put or place under; to put or place under view, or sight, under suspicion; to put before the mind, in mind; to indicate, to intimate, to apprise; to prompt, to instigate.

Dampned was he to die in that prison
For Roger, which that bishop was of Pise,
Had on him made a false suggestion,
Thurgh which the peple gan upon him rise.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14, 725.

The fend sayth, I wol chace and pursue man by wicked suggestion, and I wol hent him by meving and stirring of sinne.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Sum men might aske a question
By whose suggestion
I toke on hand this warke
Thus boldly for to barke.
Skelton. Why come ye not to Court?

Succession, conquest, and election straight
Suggested are, and prov'd in all their kinds.
Daniel. Civil War, b. iii.

And forty days Eliah without food
Wandred this barren waste, the same I now:
Why dost thou then suggest to me distrust,
Knowing who I am, as I know who thou art?
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

— Take heed gentle son
Lest some suborn'd suggester of these treasons, Believ'd in him by you, provok'd the rather
His tender envies, to such foul attempts.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act iii. sc. 1.

If good? why doe I yeeld to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth vnfixe my haire,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribbes,
Against the vse of nature.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 3.

The Spirit of God in person is not the immediate suggester of this conclusion.—Bp. Bull. Works, vol. iii. p. 885.

One drop of poison in my patron's ear,
One slight suggestion of a senseless fear,
Infus'd with cunning, serves to ruin me;
Disgrac'd, and banish'd from the family.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

— To nurse
The growing seeds of wisdom, that suggest,
By ev'ry pleasing image they present,
Reflections such as meliorate the heart,
Compose the passions, and exalt the mind.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

SUGGIL, v. } Lat. Suggillare, quasi sub SUGGILLATE, v. } cillare, from succilus, or succilum, which comes from sub, and cilium; and means macule, quæ suboculis, sive ciliis contingunt; and Cotgrave calls the Fr. Suggillation, "the bloudshot of the eye." Fr. Sugiller,—

To make black and blue with strokes; also, to nip, taunt, gall, reprove maliciously, reproach, blemish, deprave.

And what instillers soever there be, there be enough of this contemptible flock, that will not shrink to offer their blood for the defence of Christ's verity, if it be openly impugned, or secretly suggilled.

Strype. App. to Abp. Parker's Life.

The head of the os humeri was bruised, and remain suggilated long after.—Wiseman. Surgery.

SUICIDE. Fr. Suicide; It. Suicidio;—words of modern formation, (sui, and cadere, to slay.)—

The slayer of himself; also, the slaying of himself; self-murder; a self-murderer.

It is evident, that the civil laws of some countries may have reason for branding suicide with infamy, but in England it cannot be punished without punishing the effects of madness.—Montesquieu. The Spirit of Laws, b. xiv. c. 13.

The law of England wisely and religiously considers, that no man hath a power to destroy life, but by commission from God, the author of it: and as the suicide is guilty of a double offence: one spiritual in evading the prerogative of the Almighty, and rushing into his immediate presence uncalled for: the other temporal, against the king, who hath an interest in the preservation of his subjects; the law has therefore ranked this among the highest crimes, making it a peculiar species of felony, a felony committed on one's self.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14.

In countries pretending to civilisation there should be no war, much less intestine war, which may be justly called political suicide.—Knox. Letter to a Young Nobleman.

SUING, n. Is probably merely the issuing.

It is reported also credibly, that wool new shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time, had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open. In this instance there is (upon the by) to be noted, the percolation, or suing of the verjuice through the wood.
Bacon. Natural Historie, § 79.

SULKY. } The oldest instances that have SULKINESS. } occurred are from Lye. A.S. Solcen, (i.e. Sol-ic-en), sulky, deses; Solcennesse, sulkiness, desidia.

Sulkily, and to sulk, are not uncommon in vulgar speech. It seems nearly equivalent to—Sullen, (qv.)

And if it is a weakness not to be able to refrain from laughter at a ludicrous object, it is a weakness of all others the most pardonable; and it is surely better to be even weak than malignant or sulky.—Knox. Ess. No. 123.

For me, I am come to my resting-place, and find it very necessary, after living for a month in a house with three women that laughed from morning till night, and would allow nothing to the sulkiness of my disposition.
Gray. To Dr. Clarke. Aug. 1760.

SULLEN, adj. } Skinner says, perhaps

But the colours for the ground were well chosen, neither sullenly dark, nor glaringly lightsome.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

I know not (answered the sweet Philoclea, fearing least silence would offend for sullenness) what contentment you speak of.—Id. Ib.

Small Cock, a sullen brook comes to her succour then.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

Let women dye o' th' sullens too, tis natural,
But be sure their daughters be of age first,
That they may stock us still.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act ii. sc. 2.

No, saith he, let them die of the sullens, and try who will pity them.—Milton. Colasterion.

It must be as far from sullenness, as it ought to be from lightness, and a cheerful spirit is the best convoy for religion.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 23.

The idle man is like the dumb Jack in a virginal: while all the other dance out a winning musick, this, like a member out of joint, sullens the whole body, with an ill disturbing laziness.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 48.

Then on the wondrous tree the doves alight,
Where shines the fatal bough divinely bright,
That, gilding all the leaves with glancing beams,
Strikes thro' the sullen shade with golden gleams.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

While jealous pow'r does sullenly o'r-spy,
We play like deer within the Lyons eye.
Dryden. Secret Love, Act iii.

But let not our undauntedness appear the effect of sullenness, or fierceness, or of meer resolvedness, but let it be so calm and charitable, that we may not be suspected to be the martyrs, rather of our glory, or our courage, than of our religion.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 303.

I found him seated with so much sullen and stupid gravity, that notwithstanding what had been told me, I really took him for an idiot, whom the people, from some superstitious notions, were ready to worship.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

In the young, the countenance is generally free or open; but in many of the men it has a serious cast, and sometimes a sullenness or reserve, especially if they are strangers.

Chaucer. The House of Fame, b. iii.

It remaineth that I should proceed to other kinds of earth: wherein the nature of sulphur or brimstone is most wonderful, beeing able as it is to tame and consume the most things that be in the world. It is engendred within the islands Æoliæ, which lie betweene Italie and Sicalie; those I meane which (as I have said before) do alwaies burne by reason thereof. Howbeit, the best sulphur is that which commeth from the isle Melos.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 15.

Of brimstone there be foure kindes: to wit, sulphurvis or quick-brimstone, which the Greeks call apryon, because it never came into the fire; the same is found solid of it selfe, that is to say, by whole pieces and in masse, which their physicians doe use, and none but it: for all the other kinds consist of a certaine liquid substance, and beeing boyled in oyle are made up and conected to their consistence: where-as the sulphurvis is digged out of the mine such as we see, that is to say, transparent cleere, and greenish. The second kind is named gleba, good onely for tuckers and fullers. The third sort also yeeldeth but one use and no more, and that is, for tincture of wool, by reason that the smoke and perfume thereof will bring it to be white and soft; and this brimstone they call egula. As for the fourth kind, it serveth most for matches and wicks.—Id. Ib.

By that same hole an entraunce, darke, and bace,
With smoake and sulphur hiding all the place,
Descends to hell.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

A direfull stench of smoke and sulphure mixt
Ensewd, whose noyauce fild the fearefull sted
From the fourth houre of night untill the sixt.

Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 12.

When Edinburgh and Leith into the air were blown With powders sulphurous smoke, and twenty towns were thrown

Upon the trampled earth.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 29.

And with a pander's sulph'rous breath inflam'd,
Became a meteor, for destruction fram'd.

With sulphurie clouds, from whence he let abhorred lightnings fall.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

He interprets their breastplates of fire, and of jacinth and brimstone, of the colour of their horsemen's coats, as if they were made of thread of either colour "de feu," violet colour, or a pale sulphurate colour.

More. Mystery of Godliness, p. 189.

Notwithstanding these various forms, in which it appears, it is not impossible, but that in many mixt bodies, not to say in all, what is called sulphur may be no primordial ingredient, but rather a regenerated or resulting thing.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 621.

And then they seek for expiations of those visions nocturnal; charms, sulfurations, dippings in the sea, sittings

SU'MLESS.

SU'MMARY, adj.

SU'MMARY, n.

SU'MMARILY.

SU'MMING, n.

SU'MMIST.

Fr. Somme, sommaire, som-miste; It. Somma, sommario; Lat. Summa, which Scaliger thinks is—a sumendo. Vossius,—“eo summam dici, quia vere summus est is numerus, quo colligitur totum: that number in which the whole or total is collected.”

The A.S. Sam-ian, to bring together, to collect, is probably the root. See SAME and SUMMIT.

The whole, the total; all collected together;
the whole amount; quantity or number; the aggregate; the diverse or scattered parts collected, and comprehended; a compend.

The summe couth no man telle of gold that was ther in

Id. Ib. b. xii.

But as I rose out of the laving stream,
Heaven open'd her eternal doors, from whence
The spirit descended on me like a dove,
And last the sum of all, my Father's voice,
Audibly heard from Heav'n, pronounc'd me his,
Me his beloved son, in whom alone
He was well pleas'd.—Id. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Of being Joves mistresse; celebrating all
Her traine of seruants; and collaterall
Sumpture of houses; all her tripods there,
And caldrons huge; encreasing every yeare.
Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Hermes.

A man may be a good christian, and yet wear rich cloth, and fare sumptuously, and have a great retinue, and receive the respects, and keep the distances that are due to the post he maintains in the world.—Sharp, vol. v. Ser. 4.

It is high time, rather to abate something of our sumptu- ousness in these things, than to proceed any farther.
Id. vol. i. Ser. 7.

Sumptuary laws should be established and put in full force; and the incurring of debt effectually prohibited by discommuning all tradesmen who give credit.
Knox. Let. to Ld. North on the University of Oxford.

It is the highest impertinence and presumption, therefore, in kings and ministers, to pretend to watch over the economy of private people, and to restrain their expense, either by sumptuary laws, or by prohibiting the importation of foreign luxuries.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 3.

SUN, n. } Goth. Sunno; A. S. Sunna,
SUN, v. } sunne; Dut. Son; Ger. Sonne.
SUNLESS. } In Arabic, Sun is of the femi-

SUNNISH. } some northern languages, Wach-SUNNY. } ter is influenced by this circum-
SUNSHINE. } stance, among others, to conclude SUNSHINY. } that our ancestors brought the word with them from the East; and that its origin is the Arabic Sana, to shine. Vossius observes that the Ger. Son denotes aliquid singulare as in sonder, a sonder. The A. S. Seon, to see, has also been suggested because the sun is the light of the world, by which we are enabled to see.

To sun,—to put or place in, to expose to, the sun; to the heat or light of the sun.

Chaucer uses sunnish hairs, i. e. golden, like the sun, or beams of the sun. Mr. Tyrwhitt refers for illustration to v. 11,971 of Canterbury Tales.

That ye be the sones of your fadir that is in hevenes, that makith his sunne to rise upon gode, and yvel men, and reyneth on just men and unjust.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

For he maketh his sunne to arise on the eucl, and on ye good, & sendeth his rayne on the just and vnjust. Bible, 1551. Ib.

— Zephirus eke with his sote brethe
Enspired hath in every holt and hethe
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the ram his halfe cours yronne.

Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 5.

— With her salte teres,
Her breast and face ibathed was full swete,
Her mightie tresses of her sonnish heres
Unbroiden, hangen all about her eares.

Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

All other sterres, as men fynde,
Ben shinende of her owne kynde:
Out take onely the moone light,
Whiche is not of him selfe bright,
But as he taketh it of the sonne.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

In hunting of the deare, my fansie tooke delight,
All forests knew my folly still, the mooneshine was my light:

In frost I felt no cold, a sunneburnt hew was best,
I sweate and was in temper still, my watching seemed rest.—Gascoigne. Greene Knights Farewell to Fansie.

In the midst of them the sunne taketh his course, as being the greatest and most puissant of all the rest; the very ruler, not of times and seasons onely, and of the earth, but also of the starres and heaven it selfe.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 6.

— And [light] from her native east
To journe through the airie gloum began,
Sphear'd in a radiant cloud, for yet the sun
Was not; shee in a cloudie tabernacle Sojourn'd the while. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

— He by and by
His feeble feet directed to the cry;
Which to that shady delfe him brought at last,
Where Mammon earst did sunne his treasury.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

— How do'st thou imagine
This town will use us, that hath stood so long Out against Wolford?

Hem. Ev'n to hang us both
Upon their walls a sunning, to make crows meat.
Beaum. & Fletch. Beggars' Bush, Act ii. sc. 1.

How should a worm, on dust that crawls and feeds,
Climb to th' empyreal court, where these states reign,
And there take view of what heav'n's self exceeds?
The sun-less stars.—P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 6.

— So Paris from the towre
Of lofty Pergamus came forth, he shewed a sun-like powre
In cariage of his goodly parts, address now to the strife.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

There he him found all carelesly displaid,
In secrete shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid,
Amidst a flock of damzelles fresh and gay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

God saue King Henry, vnking'd Richard sayes,
And send him many yeeres of sunshine dayes.
Shakespeare. Richard II. Act iv. sc. 1.

But when he tooke a begger to his bed,
And grac'd thy poore sire with his bridall day;
Euen then that sun-shine brew'd a showre for
That washt his fathers fortunes forth of France.
Id. 3 Pt. Henry VI. Act ii. sc. 2.

The blazing brightnesse of her beauties beame,
And glorious light of her sunshiny face,
To tell, were as to strive against the streame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Thither came Uriel, gliding through the eeven
On a sun-beam, swift as a shooting starr
In autumn thwarts the night, when vapors fir'd Impress the air, and shews the mariner
From what point of his compass to beware
Impetuous winds. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Which when the wakeful elfe perceiv'd streightway
He started up and did him selfe prepayre
In sunbright armes, and battailous array;
For with that pagan proud he combatt will that day.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

His sunbroad shield about his wrest he bond,
And shyning blade unsheath'd. Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

To morrow all the sun-burn'd Greekes, will circle Troy with armes. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

Then all your beauties will be no more worth
Than gold in mines, where none doth draw it forth;
And all your graces no more use shall have Than a sun-dial in a grave.—Donne. The Will.

— O might I here

In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods impenetrable
To star or sun-light spread thir umbrage broad
And brown as Evening.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

We are near neighbors, were of love as near,
Till a cross misconstruction ('twas no more
In conscience) put us so far asunder:
I would 'twere reconcil'd; it has lasted
Too many sun-sets.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid in the Mill, Act iv. sc. 2.

The summer-sunnestead, falleth out alwaies [in Italie] to be just upon the foure and twentie day of June, at what time as the sunne is entred eight degrees within Cancer.

Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 28.

'Tis raging noon; and, vertical, the sun
Darts on the head direct his forceful rays.
O'er heaven and earth, far as the ranging eye
Can sweep, a dazzling deluge reigns; and all
From pole to pole is undistinguish'd blaze.

Thomson. Summer.

Three starless nights the doubtful navy strays
Without distinction, and three sunless days.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iii.

The sunny hills from far were seen to glow
With glittering beams, and in the meads below
The burnish'd brooks appear'd with liquid gold to flow.
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

For this intent the subtil chymist feeds
Perpetual flames, whose unresisted force,
O'er sand, and ashes, and the stubborn flint
Prevailing turns into a fusil sea,
That in his furnace bubbles sunny-red.

J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Without it all is gothic as the scene,
To which th' insipid citizen resorts
Near yonder heath; where industry mispent
But proud of his uncouth ill chosen task,
Has made a heav'n on earth; with suns and moons
Of close ramm'd stones has charg'd th' encumber'd soil,
And fairly laid the zodiac in the dust.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

All sun-rise, the horizon being extraordinarily clear to leeward, we looked well out for the Adventure; but as we saw nothing of her, judged she had got into the Sound.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 4.

Gay hope is theirs, by fancy fed,

So if we will be the children of our heavenly Father, we must be careful to keepe the christian sabbath day, which is the Sunday, not only for that it is God's expresse commandement, but also to declare our selues to be loving children, in following the example of our gracious Lord, and Father.—Homilies. Of the Place and Time of Prayer.

Since the obligations upon Christians, to comply with the religious observance of Sunday, arises from the public uses of the institution, and the authority of the apostolic practice, the manner of observing it ought to be that which best fulfils these uses, and conforms the nearest to this practice.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

Alg. Well, I will leave you to your fortitude;
And you to temperance: ah, ye pretty pair,
'Twere sin to sunder you. Lovers being alone
Make one of two, and day and night all one.

Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act iii. sc. 2.

By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his sin: when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and images shall not stand up.
Isaiah, xxvii. 9.

Those three in these three rowmes did sondry dwell,
And counselled faire Alma how to governe well.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

SUPER, in Composition; Latin preposition, from the Gr. ὑπέρ, is equivalent to our—above, over, upon.

That may be got over, or overcome; that may be conquered or subdued; conquerable.

For how can we be disheartned at any superable difficulty so long as we are animated with the perswasion, that if we have our fruit unto holiness, our end shall be everlasting life.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

They have given us such notions of eternity, as it will be very hard for considerative men to comprehend or admit, and which are encumbered with difficulties, that I doubt are scarcely, if at all superable.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 689.

When fear is discovered to be groundless, it is to be eradicated like other false opinions, and antipathies are generally superable by a single effort.—Rambler, No. 126.

SUPER-ABOUND, v. } Fr. Supérabonder; SUPERABUNDANT. } It. Soprabbondare;
SUPERABUNDANTLY. } Sp. Super-abundar;
SUPERABUNDANCE. } Lat. Super-abundare, (super-abundare;—ab-unda, from a wave.)

To abound above (measure).

To abound to excess; to overflow, or be superfluous in an excessive degree; to be copious, plentiful or exuberant beyond a sufficiency.

I know you have prudence enough to cheer up and instruct yourself; only let me tell you, that you super-abound with fancy, you have more of mind than of body.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 39.

He [God] by his superabundant fecundity, produced from himself—mind, which mind, as it looks upward towards its father, bears the perfect resemblance of its author, but as it looked downward, produced soul.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 457.

The superfluities of life (which are now in some cases by custom made almost necessary) must be supplied out of the superabundance of art and industry, or condemned by as great a degree of philosophy.—Cowley. Ess. Of Agriculture.

After all this superabundant eagerness and vehemence for a natural supremacy over God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, is only contending, in other words, for a disparity or inferiority of nature in these two Persons: and this is the sole meaning of appointing them a governor.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 13.

Nothing but the uncreated infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the desire.—Cheyne.

Suppose God in superabundance of mercy might be presumed never to withhold his grace.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

The one [manufacture] is in an advancing state, and has therefore a continual demand for new hands; the other is in a declining state, and the superabundance of hands is continually increasing.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

SUPER-ADD, v. } Lat. Super-addere, (ad, SUPERADDITION. } dare, to give, join, or put to.)

To add, join or unite to—over or above, (sc. an addition already made,) to adjoin, to increase, or augment—moreover; extraneously, or extrinsically.

And for an ornament superadded to her other perfections, she was most zealously affected to the true protestant religion, then by law established.

Lord Somers' Tract, 4th Collection, vol. i.

Alexander of Ales says it is a privation of the proper beauty and splendor of the soul, with which God adorn'd it in the creation and superaddition of grace.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 20.

The worth, and excellency, and great utility, together with the pleasantness of his vocation, deserving the highest industry, do superadd much obligation thereto.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 22.

The primitive Jewish religion was that which the patriarchs and their posterity professed and practiced before the giving of the law, and to which the ceremonial law was but a super-addition.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 8.

We are fallen, by the fault of our first parents' transgressing an easy revealed commandment, superadded very justly to the natural ones, as a further trial of their obedience.

Secker, vol. i. Ser. 21.

SUPER-ADVENIENT. Lat. Super, and adveniens, pres. part. of advenire, to come to, (ad, and venire.)

Coming to, over, above, or in addition to.

But if you'll say that memory is in the brain, but reminiscency in the conarion; I answer, that these impresses or signatures made by outward objects in the brain must also of necessity be obliterated by superadvenient impressions.—More. Antidote against Atheism, c. 9.

SUPER-ALTAR. An altar above an altar.

They reserved unto them selues, also the christenyng of belles and coniuring or hallowyng of churches and churchyardes, and of altares and of superaltares, and holowynge of chalices and so forth.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 152.

SUPER-ANNUATE, v. } Lat. Super, above, SUPERANNUATION. } and annus, a year.

To be more than, to abide or live more than, a year; more than, above or beyond the year or years—of service; of strength, mental or bodily; and, consequentially, to weaken, or be in a state of weakness, debility, or imbecility, through years or age: to be disabled by years; to be discharged or allowed to discontinue service on account of years, (sc. of previous service.)

Note, that the dying, in the winter, of the roots of plants, that are annuall, seemeth to be partly caused by the over-experience of the sap into stalk, and leaves; which being prevented, they will super-annuate, if they stand warm.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 448.

It can be nothing but giddiness or light-mindedness to think that this religion can be ever superannuated in the world, but that it shall last till Christ's corporeal appearance in the clouds.—More. Defence of the Moral Cabbala, c. 3.

This goodly ancient city methinks looks like a disconsolate widow, or rather some superannuated virgin, that hath lost her lover.—Howell, b. i. Let. 12.

We may fairly suppose there might be about a thousand fifty years old, and consequently superannuated.

Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 183.

To make cumbrous collections of numberless particulars, merely because they are fragments; and to admire them merely as they are antique, is not the spirit of ancient learning, but the mere doting of superannuation.

Pownall. On Antiq. p. 54.

SUPERB. } Fr. Superbe; It. Supèrbio; SUPERBLY. } Lat. Superbus. Vossius per-SUPERBIATE, v. } plexes by the multiplicity of conjectures, (super et ire, seems the most plausible.) The Lat. Superbus, is one who is above, moves, acts, feels or thinks himself above others; also, that which is above other things.

Lofty, stately, magnificent, majestic; grand; sumptuous to an excess, or exceeding any thing of the kind.

The Fr. Superbe is applied to persons and things.

The Eng. Superb to things only. Our examples are very modern.

By living under Pharaoh, how quickly Joseph learned the courtship of an oath! Italy builds a villain: Spain superbiates; Germany makes a drunkard, and Venice a lecher.
Feltham, pt. i. Res. 69.

But tulip-leaves and lemon-peel
Help only to adorn the meal,
And painted flags, superb and neat,
Proclaim you welcome to the treat.—Prior. Alma, c. 1.

SUPER-CARGO. It. Sopraccarico; Sp. Sobrecargo.

One placed or set over the cargo; to have the care and disposal of it.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a-muck, and tilt at all I meet;
I only wear it in a land of Hectors,
Thieves, supercargoes, sharpers, and directors.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Sat. 1.

The commodore received a letter signed by all the supercargoes of the English ships then at that place, expressing their great uneasiness about what had happened.

Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 9.

SUPER-CELESTIAL. It. Sopraccelèste. See SUBCELESTIAL.

Above the heavens, above the skies.

These words of Vossius seem to imply, the Consentes, and select, and other civil and poetical gods of the pagans, to have been generally accounted so many substantial and eternal minds, or understanding beings supercelstial, and independent.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 497.

You plead, that according to Justin, it were presumption to say that the "Maker and Father of the universe left the supercelstial mansions, and appeared here in a little part of the earth."—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 125.

SUPERCILIOUSNESS. } and cilia, the lids of the eye, so called because they continually move—cillent, Vossius; also, the eye-lash.) Lat. Superciliosus, drawing together, contracting the eyebrows, haughtily, contemptuously. Hence,— Haughty, contemptuous, disdainful, overbearing.

See the grave, sower, and supercilious sir,
In outward face, but inward, light as furre
Or feathers, lay his fortune out to show,
Till envie wound, or maimed it at a blow!
B. Jonson. Epistle to a Friend.

To see our supercilious wizerds frowne;
Their faces false like foggs.
Chapman. Homer. Concluding Verses.

Now it falls out oftentimes that men offend through intemperate compassion and tenderness, as much as by over much rigidity and severity: as much by familiarity, as by superciliousness and contempt.—Hale. Rem. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties, thou would'st fear no more.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

There are men, I say, whose special privilege it is to proceed with all these advantages deliberately and superciliously, from blunder to blunder, from year to year, in one perpetual maze of confused, incoherent, inconsistent, unmeaning schemes of business.

Bolingbroke. Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 5.

That in case they prove fit to be declined, they may appear to have been rejected, not by our superciliousness or laziness, but (after a fair trial) by our experience.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 199.

It seems to me to be none of the least prejudices, that either the haughtiness and negligence, which most men naturally are prone to, or, that wherewith they have been infected by the superciliousness and laziness, too frequent in schools, have done to the progress of natural philosophy, and the true interest of mankind, that learned and ingenious men have been kept such strangers to the shops and practices of tradesmen.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 442.

Then let the supercilious great confess
He serves his country, recompenses well
The state, beneath the shadow of whose vine
He sits secure, and in the scale of life
Holds no ignoble, though a slighted, place.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

And, therefore only slightly and superciliously asks,
"What! was not Abraham, by his very princely office, to punish idolatry? Were not Melchisedec and Job, and all the heads of tribes, to do the same?"

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. App.

While I take care of myself, of my health, of my improvement in morals and understanding, I will not harbour pride, or look down with superciliousness or ill-nature on those who live, as it were, at random, and who acknowledge no other guide of their conduct but the sudden impulse of a temporary inclination.—Knox. Ess. No. 80.

SUPER-CONCEPTION. A conception upon a conception.

In those super-conceptions, where one child was like the father, the other like the adulterer, the one favoured the servant, the other resembled the master.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

SUPER-CONSEQUENCE. A consequence above or beyond an approximate consequence.

For not attaining the deuterocopy, and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, figures, or tropologies.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

SUPER-CRESCENCE. See EXCRESCENCE.

A growing upon or above; that which grows upon or above.

Wherever it [the miseltoe] groweth, it is of constant shape, and maintains a regular figure; like other supercrecences, and such as living upon the stock of others are termed parasitical plants.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

SUPER-EMINENT. } See PRE-EMINENT.
SUPER-EMINENTLY. } Fr. Superéminence; SUPER-EMINENCY. } Lat. Supereminens, pres. part. of super-emineré, to be higher or above others.

Eminent above; being, moving, standing higher, over or above, others; exalted, elevated above; highly superior.

—And my fathers name
Alcinous is; that in the pow're and frame
Of this isles rule, is supereminent.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

But he plac'd in the convex of every one of those vast capacious spheres some living creatures to glorify his name, among whom there is in every one of them one supereminent, like man upon earth, to be lord paramount of all the rest.—Howell, b. iii. Let. 9.

But in earnest, few of that profession have here grown up to any supereminent height of learning, livelihood, or authority.—Fuller. Worthies, Cornwall.

At least this will be returned as infallibly true, that a being absolutely perfect has these, or what supereminently contains these.—More. Antidote against Atheism, b. i. c. 5.

By revealing to us his supereminent sovereignty, uncontrollable dominion, and unquestionable authority over us.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

The archbishop of Canterbury, as he is primate over all England and metropolitan, has a supereminency, and even some power over the archbishop of York.

Ayliffe. Parergon.

He that endued us with all knowing faculties, and presideth over us in the management of them, shall not be supereminently know all that we can?

Barrow. Ser. Trinity Sunday, 1663.

SUPER-EROGATE, v. } Fr. Supéréroguer; SUPEREROGATION. } It. Supererogazi- SUPERROGATIVE. } one; Lat. of the SUPEREROGATORY. } Lower Ages, Supererogare, to do above, more, than is required or asked.

For the polemical application by divines, see the quotations from Burnet and Sharp.

Voluntary works besides, over and above God's commandments, which they call works of supererogation, cannot be taught without arrogancy and impiety; for by them men do declare, that they do not only render unto God as much as they are bound to do, but that they do more for his sake than of bounden duty is required; whereas Christ saith plainly, when you have done all that are commanded to you, say, we are unprofitable servants.

Articles of Religion, (1562.) Art. 14.

(We might be engaged to enter on the examination of the Romish doctrines) of the supererogating merits of some, and applied to the benefit and pardon of others.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 479.

Supererogatory services, and too great benefits from subjects to kings, are of dangerous consequence.—Howell.

Thus Aristotle acted his own instructions; and his obsequious sectators have super-erogated in observance.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 17.

They have also another doctrine, that a man may do good works more than he is bound to do, more than any precept of God doth require of him; and these they call works of perfection, or works of supererogation; and these, to be sure, are of all others most meritorious.

Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

I can brook better a fellow that hath bought his new-found nobility with nobles, than another of an high-birth and low-stooping spirit, who can justly brag of nothing of his own, but live upon the supererogative of his ancestors.

Stafford. Niobe, pt. ii. p. 61.

Many of the saints, it seems, having not only done enough to merit immediate entrance into heaven, but more than was necessary for that purpose, this overplus of their goodness, called usually works of supererogation, joined with the infinite merits of Christ, makes a treasure of inestimable value, which the church hath the disposal of; and the Pope, as head of the church, applies towards the remission of their sins, who either fulfil in their life-time certain conditions appointed by him, or whose friends will fulfil them after their deaths.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 32.

SUPER-ESSENTIAL. Above or more than essential; more than (necessarily) appertains to the essence or being.

But the spirit of God was the vehicle of the eternal wisdom and of the super-essential goodness.

More. Philosophical Cabbala, c. 1.

SUPER-ETHICAL. Above or more than ethical; more than moral; or than (necessarily) appertains to morality.

Moral theology contains a superethical doctrine, as some grave divines have ridiculously called it.

Bolingbroke. Auth. in Matters of Religion, § 6.

SUPER-EXAL'T, v. } Super, and exaltare,
SUPER-EXALTA'TION. } (ex, and altus, high.)
To exalt, to raise, to elevate over or above.

God advanced him to be a prince and a saviour, to give repentance unto Israel and remission of sins; having super-exalted him, and bestowed on him a name above all names, to which all knees in heaven, in earth, and under the earth, must bow.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 31.

In a superexaltation of courage, they seem as greedy of death as of victory.—Holyday.

SUPER-EXCELLENT. Excellent above; in comparison to what is excellent; surpassing excellence.

Your Latin poems in my opinion, both for invention and elocution, are verie delicate and super-excellent.

Spenser. Epistle to Maister Harvey. Postscript.

Those super-excellent books, wherein that incomparable Solomon wrote from the cedar to the hyssop, were (upon fear of the facile multitudes too much respecting natural causes in them divinely handled) by king Ezechias suppress from succeeding ages.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11. Note.

SUPER-EXCRESCENCE. See SUPERCRES-CENCE.

An excrescence growing over or above.

After the escar separated, I rubbed the superexcrecence with a vitriol stone.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. iv. c. 5.

SUPERFETE, v. } Fr. Superfetation; Lat.
SUPERFETATE, v. } Superfetare, to produce SUPERFETA'TION. } or generate above or upon.

To generate, or engender upon a prior conception. See the quotation from Brown.

So is my fancy quickned by the glance
Of his benign aspect and countenance;
It makes me pregnant and to superfete;
Such is the vigour of his beams and heat.

Howell. Royal Present to his Majesty, 1641.

The female brings forth twice in one month, and so is said to superfete, which, saith Aristotle, is because her eggs are hatched in her one after another.—Grew. Museum.

Two things therefore may be certainly set down: first, that super-fetation must be by abundance of sap, in the bough that putteth it forth; secondly, that that sap must be such, as the tree doth exerne, and cannot assimilate; for else it would go into a bough.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 556.

She [Nature] especially promotes the multiplication of hares, which is by superfetation; that is, a conception upon a conception, or an improvement of a second fruit before the first be excluded.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

His lordship's false conceptions are always attended with superfetations.—Warburton. Alliance. Postsc. to 4th Edit.

Whoso looked than in thantrailes of the body of Alcibiades, that was full faire in the superficie without, it shulde seme right foule.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Beseeching her, even with tears, to know, that his love was not so superficial, as to go no farther than the skin.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

And when the broad backe of the sea, their pleasure was to sit,
The superfices of his waves, they slid upon; their hoves
Not dipt in danke sweate of his browes.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

The business of these professors should not be as is commonly practiced in other arts, only to read pompous and superficial lectures out of Virgil's Georgics, Pliny, Varro, or Columella.—Cowley. Ess. Of Agriculture.

Now such passages as these, abounding every where in pagan writings, it is no wonder if many considering their theology but slightly and superficially have been led into an error.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 256.

By which salts the colours of bodies are sensibly qualified, and receive degrees of lustre or obscurity, superficiality or profundity, fixation or volatility.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

Next fill the hole with its own earth agen,
And trample with thy feet, and tread in it:
Then if it rise not to the former height
Of superficie, conclude that soil is light;
A proper ground for pasturage and vines.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

The author has superficially touched upon the several matters contained in my remarks.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 433.

The idea of filling a place equal to the contents of its superficies, being annexed to our idea of body, I think it is a self-evident proposition, that two bodies cannot be in the same place.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 8.

A more recent tradition assures us, that when the same opinions revived at the Restoration, they did not sink deep even then into the minds of men; but floated so superficially there, that the parliament proceeded a great way, and was ready to have proceeded further, in direct opposition to them.—Bolingbroke. Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 4.

These things are never to be understood without much more than a superficial knowledge of the scriptures, especially the scriptures of the New Testament; and yet the knowledge of the scriptures which is necessary to the understanding of these things is what few in this country (I would hope) are too illiterate to obtain.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 1.

SUPERFLUOUS. } Fr. Superflu; It. Su-

SUPERFLUITANCE. } fluere, to overflow.)
SUPERFLUITY. } Flowing over, or SUPERFLUX. } above, overflowing; flowing or abounding to excess; copious or plentiful, beyond need or use.

I say not that honestee in clothinge of man or woman is unconvenable, but certes the superfluitie or disordinat or scarcitee of clothing is reprevable.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The Romaines maden a chayere,
And sette her emperour therein.
And sayden, for he wolde wynne
Of golde the superfluitee,
Of golde he shulde suche plentee
Receyue, till he saide ho.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For some there are that wene they meane well, whyle they frame theym selfe a conscience, and euer keepe styll a great heape of superfluous substace by theym, thinking euer styl that they wyl bethinke theimselfe vppon some good deede, whereon they will well bestowe it once, or that els their executours shall.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1227.

I rather would wyshe euerye man to laboure for good affections, thē to long for ye knowledge of lesse necessarye learning, or delite in debating of sundrye superfluous problemes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1281.

And for to be the more set by, pryde longed superfluously to gete by couetyse and gredynes many folkes lyuynges in his owne handes, to make other folkes serue hym and honour and hange vpon him for necessity.—Id. Ib. p. 157.

How farre are they of from good scholers, that can not finde in their hartes to depart with a title of the abundance & superfluitie of their temporall goodes, to helpe their neighbours neede?—Tyndall. Workes, p. 413.

And ever as superfluous flesh did rott,
Amendment readie still at hand dyd wayt,
To pluck it out with pincers fyrie whott,
That soone in him was left no one corrupted iott.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

It would not be forgotten, to proine these yong plants when they are but new come up—to cut away, I say, the superfluous sprigs underneath, and use them betimes to the hooke.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 10.

Wherefore this rather makes for discriminative providence, that knew afore the nature and course of all things, and made therefore her contrivancies accordingly, doing nothing superfluously or in vain.

More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 9.

The superfluence of grace is ordinarily proportioned to the faithful discharge of former trusts, making use of the foregoing sufficient grace.—Hammond.

Out of the cream or superfluity, the finest dishes, saith he, are made, out of the residue thereof the coarser.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

For in a people given all to ease,
Ambition is engendred easily;
As, in a vicious bodie, grose disease
Soone growes through humours superfluitie.
Spenser. The Ruines of Rome.

— O I haue tane

Too little care of this: take physicke, pompe,
Expose thy selfe to feele what wretches feele,
That thou maist shake the superflux to them,
And show the heauens more iust.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 4.

— Let crooked steel invade

The lawless troops, which discipline disclaim,
And their superfluous growth with rigour tame.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

I think there's no folly so great in any poet of our age as the superfluity and waste of wit was in some of our predecessors.—Id. Pref. to an Evening's Love.

And then our knowledge of moral good and evil is solely acquired by abstract reasoning: and to talk of its coming any other way into the mind, is weak and superstitious, as making God act unnecessarily and superfluously.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. i. § 4.

They seemed to have no wish for any thing more than they possessed, nor did any thing we offered them appear acceptable but beads, as an ornamental superfluity of life.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 5.

SUPER-FŒCUNDITY. Fruitfulness or productiveness—above measure, to an excess.

But, to do justice to the question, the system of animal destruction ought always to be considered in strict connexion with another property of animal nature, viz. superfecundity. They are countervailing qualities.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

SUPER-FOLIA'TION. Lat. Super-folium. Leafiness, or production of leaves to excess.

This, in the pathology of plants, may be the disease of superfoliation, mentioned by Theophrastus; whereby the fructifying juice is starved by the excess of leaves.

Brown. Miscell. p. 76.

SUPER-HUMERATE, v. To place over or upon our shoulders (humeros); to aid in bearing a burthen.

Nothing surer tyes a friend, then freely to superhumerate the burthen which was his.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 82.

SUPER-INCUMBENT. Lat. Super, and incumbens, pres. part. of incumbere, (in, and cum-bere,) to be upon.

Lying upon, resting upon.

Most of the same things that are done by the pressure of all the superincumbent atmosphere acting as a weight, may be likewise performed by the pressure of a small portion of air, (included indeed but without any new compression) acting as a spring.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 176.

Prejudices will die, and truth emerge, when the superincumbent weight shall be at last removed.

Knox. Letter to Lord North on the University of Oxford.

SUPER-INDUCE, v. Lat. of the Lower SUPERINDUCEMENT. Ages, Superinducere, SUPERINDUCTION. (in, and ducere, to lead or bring in.)

To bring in, over and above, upon or in addition to.

Then shall men curse their evil guides, and their accursed superinduced necessities, and the evil guises of the world.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 2.

And this heathen folly hath stuck so close to the christian, that all the sermons of the church for 1600 years have not cured them all; but the practices of weaker people and the artifice of ruling priests have superinduced many new ones.

Id. Ib. Ser. 9.

But if the places be well considered where the expression by nature occurs, we shall find that it is put in opposition to something accessional, superinduced, accidental, or the like.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 429.

In all such cases the superinducement of greater perfections and nobler qualities destroys nothing of the essence or perfections that were there before; unless there can be shewed a manifest repugnancy between them.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 3.

He did also promise, for himself and his heirs, that no new order under another name should be superinduced.

Fuller. Worthies. Berkshire.

This tradition [worship by sacrifice] was in course of time, for want of care and frequent renewals, corrupted with many human superinducements, according to the genius or interests of several times or nations.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 12.

A good inclination is but the first rude draught of virtue; the superinduction of ill habits quickly deface it.—South.

Long habits of business or pleasure, and an indiscriminate intercourse with mankind, often superinduce a great degree of insensibility.—Knox. Ess. 2.

Hence, we understand the futility of Mr. Locke's superinduction of the faculty of thinking to a system of matter; conceived by that excellent writer, in the modest fear of circumscribing Omnipotence.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Note A.

SUPER-INTEND, v. Fr. Superintendant;
SUPERINTENDENT, adj. It. Soprintendere, so-SUPERINTENDENT, n. pran-tendente; Lat. of SUPERINTENDENCE. the Lower Ages, Su-SUPERINTENDENCY. per-intendere, (inten- dere, to strain or direct—the mind to.)

To direct the mind to, or to a care over; to have or keep guard or watch over; to overlook, to oversee, (sc.) with care or attention.

In like manner, they called both the child-bearing of women, and the goddesses that superintend over the same, Ellithuia or Lucina.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 229.

It is shrewdly to be suspected, if there were no superintendant over the motions of those æthereall whirl-pools, which the French philosophy supposes, that the form of the sun and the rest of the stars would be oblong, not round, because the matter recedes all along the axis of a vortex, as well as from the centre.

More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 1.

That the foregoing phenomena are not by chance or luck, but directed and effected by the above said superintendency, will be more evincingly confirmed, if we adde the consideration of two other phenomena in nature, which are very plain and simple.—Id. Ib. c. 2.

There is a superintendent council of ten, and six of them may dispatch business without the Doge.

Howell, b. i. Let. 35.

And can we think this, and the same time believe, that there is a righteous providence which superintends the affairs of the world?—Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 4.

The Zuinglians had no superintendants, for ought I can find; nor was Hooper ever called superintendant, but byshop.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. Appendix.

It is he that gave the sun its light, and who directs the courses of the stars; who is superintendent every where, and steers the whole world.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Whence that which is acted in way of formal judgment by persons in authority, God himself may be deemed in a more special and immediate manner to execute it, as being done by his commission, in his stead, on his behalf, with his peculiar superintendence.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

The thing I aim at is only to shew, that such things may possibly be effected by matter and motion, as no wise man will believe to have been produced by a bare agitation of the particles of matter, not guided by the superintendency of a powerful and knowing director.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 49.

Being thus prepared in the afternoon, they are spread out upon plantain leaves in the evening; and in this part of the work there appears to be some difficulty, as the mistress of the family always superintends the doing of it.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 18.

I procured an order to the superintendent of the island of Ourust, where the ship was to be repaired, to receive her there.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 10.

This, too, was the time when the mention of the thing was most likely to occur to the apostle's thoughts; when he was about to be removed from the superintendence of the church, and was composing an epistle for the direction of the flock which he so faithfully had fed, after his departure.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

How naturally doth this consideration lead us forward to the yet more delightful one, of that sweet security, in which we may live here under the superintendency of so gracious a Being.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

SUPER-INVESTITURE. An upper vest or clothing.

Not for that "we should be unclothed," or lose the body, "but clothed upon" with a superinvestiture of the house from heaven, namely, the divine light, which is to enwrap and invest the mortal body, as a garment.

Bp. Horne. Dis. 17.

SUPERIOR, adj. Fr. Supérieur; It. Superiore; Sp. Superior; SUPERIOR, n. periore; Lat. Superior, from super,
SUPERIORLY. over or above.
SUPERIORITY.

Higher, loftier; (met.) higher in rank, in quality; more eminent, more excellent; greater, better.

And therby in such maner obedient vnto his father, as we say a mā is obedient vnto hys owne reason, and yet is not his own reason another power superiour aboue himself.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1053.

And two masters where one is vnder the other and a substitute, may a man serue. For the seruice of the interiour in the cōmaundement of the superiour.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 233.

If there be any superiority in the points of true love, it shall be yours.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

— In no sort,

This frighted Hector, who bore close: and said Æacides,
Leave threats for children; I have powre to thunder calumnies,
As well as other; and well know thy strength superiour farre,
To that my nerves hold; but the gods (not nerves) determine warre.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

Upon which grounds of all other things he more dislik'd the being left to make a choice; and hugely applauded the state of subjection to a superiour, where an obsequious diligence was the main ingredient of duty: as also he did the state of subjection unto pressure, as a privilege and blessing.—Fell. Life of Hammond.

If the desire of rule and superiority be a virtue, we ought not to esteeme any thing vice, which is the most proper, if not the only, means of attaining of it.

Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,

As to some being of superiour kind.

Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Superiors should look upon themselves as trustees for the publick good, whom God hath invested with authority over others, not to domineer and gratify their own imperious wills, but to provide for and secure the commonwealth.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

The sense of all which is, to oblige us to treat all men as becomes us, in the rank and station we are placed in; to honour those which are our superiours, whether in place or virtue; to give that modest deference to their judgments, that reverence to their persons, that respect to their virtues, and homage to their desires or commands, which the degree or kind of their superiority requires.—Id. Ib.

As an ant, of his talents superiorly vain,

Was trotting with consequence over the plain.

Cunningham. The Ant & Caterpillar.

We commonly find in the ambitious man a superiority of parts, in some measure proportioned to the magnitude of his designs.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 4.

SUPERLATION. Fr. Superlatif; It.

SUPERLATIVE, adj. Superlativo; Sp. Superlativo; Lat. Superlatio, SUPERLATIVE, n. lativo; from super-latus, borne SUPERLATIVELY. or carried over—on high.

A bearing, carrying, on high, very high; elevation or exaltation to a great height.

Superlative,—lofty, or rising aloft to a great height; of the highest degree; exceeding, surpassing common eminence or excellence; very eminent, very excellent.

There are words, that doe as much raise a style, as others can deprese it. Superlation, and over-muchnesse amplifies. It may be above faith, but never above a meane.

B. Jonson. Discoveries.

His birth from Heav'n, your Tudor not derives,
Nor stands on tip-toes in superlatives,
Although the envious English do devise
A thousand jests of our hyperbolies.

Drayton. Owen Tudor to Queen Catharine.

How in my thoughts shall I contrive
The image I am framing,
Which is so far superlative,
As 'tis beyond all naming?

Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 3.

For in this smoothing age who durst indite
Hath made his pen an hired parasite,
To claw the back of him that beastly lives,
And pranck base men in proud superlatives.

Bp. Hall. Satires, Prol.

Wherein you see, that crying in these eagerly fought fowles [vultures] (which is like teares in angry men) is so farre from softnesse, that to the superlative of hardnesse and courage, it expresseth both.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

"What is she married? then doe yee
Superlatively sinne:
Or mayde? I like not maidens that
So forwardly beginne.

Warner. Albion's England, b. xii. c. 76.

In boundless verse the fancy soars too high
For any object, but the Deity.
What mortal can with Heaven pretend to share
In the superlatives of wise and fair!

Waller. On Divine Poesy, c. 1.

You may consider him as judge, your particular judge, and so present him with judicial worship: but if you consider him farther as judge of all men, nay, and as judge of angels, or of the whole system of creatures, the worship will be then most highly and superlatively judicial.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 348.

We [says Cicero] despise human things, and fixing our thoughts on things above, look down with contempt on these concerns of ours as superlatively mean and little.

Knox. On Liberal Education, § 36.

SUPERLUNARY. }

Being above the moon, or lunar world.

[Jupiter] before a frequent convocation of the superlunary peers, in a solemn oration recanted, disclaimed, and utterly renounced all the lascivious extravagancies and riotous enormities of his forepast licentious life.

Carew. Cælum Britannicum.

The mind in metaphysics at a loss,
May wander in a wilderness of moss;
The head that turns at superlunar things,
Pois'd with a tail may steer on Wilkin's wings.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

But those chimeras touch not thee, Lorenzo!
The glories of the world thy sevenfold shield.
Other ambition than of crowns in air,
And superlunary felicities,
Thy bosom warm.

Young. Complaint, Night 6.

SUPER-MUNDANE. } See MUNDANE.
SUPERMUNDIAL. }

Ages, Supermundialis.

Above this world; above this worldly system.

The Pythagoreans and the Platonists, had several distinctions among them concerning their gods, or between the supermundane and the mundane gods; the eternal and generated gods.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 546.

Plato conceiveth, that there are certain substances, invisible, incorporeal, supermundial, divine and eternal.

Id. Ib. p. 563.

SUPERN, adj. } Fr. Supernel; It. Super- SUPERNAL. } nale; Sp. Supernal; Lat.
Supernus, (from super, above): rising or raised above.

Being over or above; higher, loftier; on an eminence or elevation; heavenly.

For they that sometime were able to perfourme the thyng indeed, be now taken awaye (as we sayd) to the heavenly Jherusalem bycause they were soo pleasaunte in the syghte of thy aungelles. Also they semed and were very apte in dede vnto the superne and celestyal Jherusalem.

Fisher. Penitential Psalms, Ps. 143. pt. ii.

So doth he vse both the service of the bodely senses and of the reasō of the soule toward the service of the faith, adding therewith because it is a thing farre above ye nature of the both, his own supernatural ayde & helpe of hys supernall grace to preuēt vs with occasions and mocions of beliefe.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 694.

— I am sent

To shew thee what shall come in future dayes
To thee and to thy offspring; good with bad
Expect to hear, supernal grace contending
With sinfulness of men.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

According to which most comprehensive sense (suited the nature of the thing) I do take the word, supposing that St. Paul doth enjoin us to employ all our mental faculties in study, choice, passion, endeavour upon supernal things.

Barrow. Defence of the Trinity.

From you, blest pair! religion deigns to claim
Her sacred honours; at her awful name
High o'er the stars you take your soaring flight,
And rove the regions of supernal light.

Mason. Dufresnoy. Art of Painting.

SUPER-NATANT. } Fr. Super-nater; Lat.
SUPERNATA'TION. } Super-natare, to swim over or above, (super, and natare.)

Swimming over or above; floating upon.

After the urinous spirit had precipitated the gold into a fine calx, the supernatant liquor was highly tinged with blue, that betrayed the alloy of copper, that did not before appear.

Boyle. Workes, vol. iii. p. 421.

They [bodies] are differenced by supernatation or floating upon water, for chrystal will sink in water, as carrying in its own bulk a greater ponderosity, then the space in any water it doth occupy.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

SUPER-NATURAL. } Fr. Supernaturel; It.
SUPERNAT'URALLY. } Soprannaturale; Sp.
Sobrenaturale; from Lat. Supernaturam, above nature.

Being above nature, or the powers of nature;
more than, above what—is natural.

All these gyftes God gaue hym about hys naturales, and not for himself onely, but for him and al his posteritye.
But all these supernaturall gyftes he gaue him with the knot of thys condicion, that is to wytte, that yf hee brake hys commaundement, then should he lese them al.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1286.

— For the seas retaine

Not onely their outrageous æsture there;
But fierce assistants, of particular feare,
And supernaturall mischief, they expire;
And those are whirlwinds of deuouring fire
Whisking about still.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

As he often interrogates his muse, not as his rational spirit, but as a familiar, separated from his body, so her replies bring him where he spends time in immortal conversation; whilst supernaturally, he doth often advance his men to the quality of gods, and depose his gods to the con-dicion of men.—Davenant. Gondibert, Pref.

Cures, wrought by medicines, are natural operations;
but the miraculous ones wrought by Christ and his apostles, were supernatural.—Boyle. Workes, vol. v. p. 167.

For when he rewards men supernaturally, it is for those actions that carry a natural reward with them; and when he punishes them supernaturally, it is for such actions as do carry a natural punishment with them: so that his supernatural rewards and punishments do speak the same sense and language with his natural, only they speak plainer and louder, to rouse and awake those stupid souls, that are deaf to, and regardless of the soft and still voice of natural rewards and punishments.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 1.

On these naturall powers, with which the apostles were endowed, were engrafted the supernatural powers of the Holy Ghost.—Gilpin, vol. ii. Ser. 61.

But God is ready to give us more strength, if we will ask it: and he may undoubtedly subject us to any difficulty that he pleases, provided he bestows on us, whether naturally or supernaturally, the power of going through them in the manner that he expects from us: which he certainly doth bestow on all men.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 15.

SUPER-NU'MERARY. Fr. Supernuméraire;
It. Soprannumerario; Sp. Supernumerario; Lat.
Supernumerarius: above the number (super- numerus.)

Above the number (sc.) fixed or required;
above the regular number; redundant, overplus.

And understood not all was but a show
Rather then solid vertu, all but a rib
Crooked by nature, bent, as now appears,
More to the part sinister from me drawn,
Well if thrown out, as supernumerary
To my just number found.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

This is not drunkenness, but free mirth, and fair society;
it is refreshment, and entertainment of some supernumerary hours, but it is not a throwing away my time or neglecting a day of salvation.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Besides those supernumerary stripes they must expect to receive from God, as being servants that have known their master's will, and experienced the goodness of it, and yet have finally refused to comply with it; their reflections on their own apostacy, and the folly and madness of it, will doubtless gall and torment them a thousand times more than all the other stings of their conscience together.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

The supernumerary hours have indeed a great variety both of pleasure and of pain.—Idler, No. 80.

SUPER-PLANT. A plant growing upon (sc.)
another plant, as mistletoe.

We find no super-plant, that is a formed plant, but miseltoe.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 556.

1864

If you will devise to make any super-plants, you must ever give the sap plentifull rising, and hard issue.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 635.

And they surely speak probably who make it [the miseltoe] an arboreous excrescence or rather super-plant, bred of a viscous and superfluous sap which the tree it self cannot assimilate.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

SUPER-PLUSAGE. i. e. Surplusage, (qv.)

In short time a stock was rais'd to be always ready for the apprentising of young children, whose parents' condition made the provision for them an equal charity to both the child and parent. And after this there yet remain'd a super- plusage for the assistance of the neighbour parishes.

Fell. Life of Hammond, p. 3.

SUPER-PRAISE, v. To praise over and above—praise due or deserved.

If you are men as men you are in show,

You would not vse a gentle lady so;

To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,

When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 2.

SUPER-PURGA'TION. Purgation above (sc.) the common degree.

There happening a superpurgation, he declined the repeating of that purge.—Wiseman. Surgery.

SUPER-REFLE'CTION. Reflection over or upon a reflection. See the quotation.

There be three kindes of reflexions of sounds; a reflexion concurrent; a reflexion iterant, which we call eccho; and a super-reflexion, or an eccho of an eccho.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 241.

The voice in that chappell, createth speciem speciei and maketh succeeding super-reflections; for it melteth by degrees, and every reflexion is weaker than the former.

Id. Ib. § 249.

SUPER-RE'GAL. See the quotation.

For the purpose; you may consider him as king, and so you may present him with regal worship; or as king of kings, and then it will be super-regal.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 348.

SUPER-SA'LIENCY. Lat. Super, and sa- liens, leaping upon.

And their [elephant] coition is made by supersaliency, like that of horses.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 1.

SUPER-SCRIBE, v. } See SUBSCRIBE. Fr.
SUPERSCRI'PTION. } Superscription; It. So- prascrivere; Sp. Sobrescriber; Lat. Superscribere.
To write over, or above or upon.

Some saith he made a tombe of marble gray,
And wrote her name and superscripcioun,
And layd it on her graue whereas she lay,
In golden letters.—Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide.

In the superscription it appeared slubbered, by reason of often handling, peradventure lying among his writings and old letters.—State Trials. 19 Hen. VIII. an. 1528.

And they toke him a peny. And he sayde vnto them:
whose is this image and superscription? they said vnto him:
Cesars.—Bible, 1551. Mathew, c. 22.

And if this treason go
To an overt act, and that thou write again
In superscribing, my name flow
Into thy fancy from the pen,
So in forgetting thou remembrest right,
And unaware to me shall write.

Donne. A Valediction of my Name, &c.

That which was meant for the queen was superscrib'd,
"To his dear wife;" and that for his wife, "To her most excellent majesty."—Howell, b. iv. Let. 2.

I receiv'd two of yours upon Tuesday last, one to your brother, the other to me; but the superscriptions were mistaken.—Id. Ib.

A devise there was besides, of an ægle flying over their heads, clasping a dragon within her talions. And as it appeared by the superscription, Philochares was the worke-man.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 4.

Fabretti and others are apt to believe, that by the two fortunes were only meant in general the goddess who sent prosperity, and she who sent afflictions to mankind; and produce in their behalf an ancient monument found in this very place [Antium] and superscrib'd Fortunæ felici.

Addison. Italy.

SUPER-SE'CLAR. See SECULAR.

Let us, saith he, celebrate this feast, not in a panegyricall but divine, not in a worldly but supersecular, manner.

Bp. Hall. Remaines, p. 302.

SUPER-SEDE, v. } Fr. Superséder; It. So- SUPERSEDEAS. } prassedere; Lat. Superse- dere, to sit upon; quasi aliqua re cunctari, et sedendo nihil agere; to delay, to desist, to cease.
 To stay, or stop; to desist, to forbear; to stay,
 to set at rest, to annul or avoid.

He [Henry VIII.] desired the bishop of Paris to certify Francis, that if the pope would supersede from executing his sentence, until he had indifferent judges sent, who might hear the business, he would also supersede from the execution of what he was deliberated to do in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman see.

State Trials. 19 Hen. VIII. an. 1528.

Secondly, because one other doctrine there is, which constantly accompanies the doctrine of irrelative decrees, which supersedes all farther dispute in this matter, the doctrine of the irresistibility of grace, in working whatsoever it works.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 486.

And many of these in their own nature (over and above this pharisaical opinion of the sanctity of them) very apt to intermit our watch, to slacken our diligence, to give a superseas to industry.—Id. Ib. p. 480.

It seems neither decorous in respect of God, nor congruous to reason, that he should do all things himself immediately and miraculously, nature being quite superseas and made to signify nothing.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 178.

The gospel doth not supersede any reasonable duties of divine worship, but gives new arguments and motives for the performance of them.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

SUPER-SERVICEABLE. Serviceable, or giving or offering services above need, superfluously.

Glasse-gazing super-serviceable finicall rogue.

Shakespeare. Lear, Act ii. sc. 2.

SUPERSTITION. } Fr. Superstition; It. Super-

SUPERSTITIOUSNESS. } stitio,—quando in cultu SUPERSTITIONIST. } ultra modum legitimum

aliquid superest, sive quando cultus modum rectum superstat, atque excedit, (Vossius.) When there is excess, superfluity, or superabundance in worship. Cotgrave strongly expresses it,—

Excess of scruple or ceremony in matters of religion; idle worship, vain reverence; a superfluous, needless, or ill-governed devotion.

The end is not but sorrow and mischance,
 Of them that setten hir vtter affiance
 In soch werkes supersticious.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, b. iii.

They brought none accusation of suche thinges as I supposed; but had certayne questiōs against him of their owne supersticio, [vain worshipping, Wiclif.] and of one Jesus whiche was deade; whom Paul affirmed to be alyue.

Bible, 1551. Actes, c. 25.

Paule stode in the myddes of Marce [Mars] strete, & said: ye mē of Athēs I perceaue that in all thynges ye are to supersticious, [vain worshippers, Wiclif.] For as I passed by and beheld the maner how ye worship your goddes, I founde an aulter wherin was wrytten; vnto the vnknewen God.

Id. Ib. c. 17.

He would obey the cōmaūdement gladly, but yet not so supersticiously but y^t in time of his disease he would drynke wine to recouer his helth.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 367.

Remembringe also hys prynces pleasure, which hath wylled all supersticiousnesse to be taken away from the ceremonies.—Bale. Yet a Course, &c. (1543) fol. 22.

It were better to have no opinion of God at all, than such an opinion as is unworthy of him; for the one is unbeliefe, the other is contumely; and certainly superstition is the reproach of the Deity.—Bacon. Ess. Of Superstition.

The master of superstition is the people; and in all superstition, wise men follow fooles.—Id. Ib.

Superstition of an undue object, is that which the etymologist calls τὴν εἰδωλὸν σεβασμῶν, the worshipping of idols.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

Above all other things, the superstitious vanities of magicians made much to the establishing of Asclepiades his new physicke hearbs; for they in the height of their vanitie, attributed so strange and incredible operations to some simples, that it was enough to discredit the vertues of them all.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 4.

This is the true purification, not that which most men do, superstitiously cleansing their hands and washing when they go to prayers, but cleansing the soul from all impiety, and leaving every affection to sin; then they come pure to God.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 4.

VOL. II.

Our Saviour certainly conceived high indignation and sorrow in his heart, while he observed that scorn and contempt those blind superstitionists, the Jews, bore against the poor despised Gentiles, in thus profaning their place of worship.—More. Mystery of Godliness, p. 417.

By which means the vulgar are confirmed in their superstitious belief, of ghosts, spirits, daemons, devils, fayries, and hob-goblins, invisible powers and agents, called by several names, and that by those persons whose work it ought to be rather to free men from such superstition.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 68.

These philosophers were the rather inclinable to this persuasion from a superstitious conceit which they had, that the stars being animated, were intellectual beings of a far higher rank than men.—Id. Ib. p. 5.

Plotinus rigidly and superstitiously adheres to Plato's text here.—Id. Ib. p. 585.

For when fools fly from superstition, they run into atheism, the other extreme, skipping over right religion that lies in the middle.—Bentley. Of Free-Thinking, § 50.

They adhered, I say strictly, and even superstitiously to the letter of that law, which allowed of no other gods besides the God of Israel.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 2.

SUPER-STRAIN, v. To strain over and above; to overstrain.

In the straining of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 182.

SUPER-STRUCT, v. } See SUBSTRUCTION.
SUPERSTRUCTING, n. } Lat. Superstructum, SUPERSTRUCTION. } past part. of super-
SUPERSTRUCTIVE. } struere, to build upon.
SUPERSTRUCTURE. } To build, or raise, or erect, a building or edifice upon.

And above all things, that a most holy life be superstructed upon a holy and unreprouable faith.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

The vitious christian, if he have advanced no farther than so, and if his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, may think it reasonable to reform and amend upon such terms as these, the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 484.

And supposing farther that the several before-mentioned branches of the superstructure be so far taught and believed also, as that they are not doubted to be the vertues prescribed, and preached to men by Christ; it is yet possible, that after all this, some other doctrines may inconveniently interpose, and intercept the uses and aims, to which God hath designed the faith, and at once obstruct the superstructing of all christian life upon it.—Id. Ib. p. 479.

Trees sprout not cross like dry and sapless beams, nor do spars and tiles spring with a natural uniformity into a roof, and that out of stone and mortar: these are not the works of nature, but superstructions and additions to her, as the supplies of art.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 1.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him, and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure, be it never so gross.—Hammond.

In some places, as in Amsterdam, the foundation costs more than the superstructure, for the ground being soft, they are constrain'd to ram in huge stakes of timber (with wool about it to preserve it from putrefaction) till they come to a firm basis.—Howell. b. i. Let. 15.

As you will answer it at your eternal peril, do not cheat and abuse your selves with the name and shadow of religion; lest when you have superstructed your hopes of happiness on a rotten foundation, it should finally miscarry and sink underneath you into everlasting wretchedness and despair.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 2.

If a grammatical foundation be not laid deep at an early age, it will not often be laid in such a manner as to bear a large superstructure.—Knox. Liberal Education.

SUPER-SUBSTANTIAL. See SUBSTANTIAL, and the quotation from Knox.

Thys Englyshe woorde Godde, signifieth vnto vs, not onelye the vniuite of the three persones, and not onelye theyr superstanciall substance, but also euery gracious propertie, as iustice, mercy, trouth, almightinesse, eternitie, and euerye good thyng more than we can ymagine.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1339.

But after that our Lorde sayde: dooe thys in remembrance of me, thys is my fleshe and thys is my bloud, as often as it is doone with these woordes, and with thys fayth, that heauenlye and superstanciall breadde and cuppe, beyng consecrate with that solemne benedictiō, is profitable to the lyfe and saluacyon of the whole man, beyng bothe a medicine to heale infirmities, and a sacrifice to purge iniquities.—Id. Ib. p. 1342.

Some of the ancients, and particularly Jerom, translated the epithet Epiusios "superstanciall, and superessential," instead of "daily," and at this hour it stands so translated in the Vulgate bible, for ages the only bible of the people.—Knox. Considerations on the Lord's Supper.

1865

SUPER-SUBTLE. See SUBTLE. Subtle over and above (measure).

If sanctimonie, and a fraile vow, betwixt an erring barbarian, and a super-subtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enioy her.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

SUPER-TEMPORAL. Above or beyond time, and, consequentially, eternal.

Plotinus and Numenius explaining Plato's sence, declare him to have asserted, three super-temporals or eternals, good, mind or intellect, and the soul of the universe.

Cudworth. Intellectual System p. 625.

SUPER-VACANEOUS. Lat. Supervacaneus.

Idle above what is usual or ordinary; needlessly idle.

Being now wind bound for Africk, I held it not altogether supervacaneous to take a review of them, and inform your lordship what languages are original independent mother-tongues of Christendom, and what are dialects, derivations, or degenerations from their originals.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 60.

For if immortality had been due to the observance of the law implanted in man from his creation, then certainly the legislation superadded, wherein that immortality was promised to man, no other wise than upon the observance of the positive precept, would have been supervacaneous, and even absurd.—Bp. Bull, vol. ii. Dis. 5.

[Between] the imperfection of nature where we stand by our creation, and supervening follies, and that state of felicities, whither we are designed by the mercies of God, there is a middle state.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 12.

His good will when plac'd on any was so fix'd and rooted, that even supervening vice, to which he had the greatest detestation imaginable, could not easily remove it, the abhorrency of their guilts leaving not only a charity but a tenderness for their persons.—Fell. Life of Dr. Hammond.

His oath made not that lawful which was illegal before: and if it were unjust to murder John, the supervening oath did not extenuate the fact, or oblige the juror unto it.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 14.

An espousal-contract therefore may (according to their judgement) be broken off by susception of orders after contract: by the supervention of a legal kindred inexpected.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 6.

It is not the water that confers this benefit, (for then would it be superior to the whole creation,) but it is the appointment of God, and the supervening of the Spirit, mystically advancing to our rescue: however, the water serves to signify the cleansing.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 287.

Which seems to argue, that this compact and ponderous body was made of a stony nature by the supervening power of some petrescent liquor or spirit upon porous earth or some other consistent substance.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 589.

Some caution indeed is in this matter to be used, that those motions of soul, which proceed from particular temper and complexion, from supervening principles or habits, may be distinguished from those which are natural and common unto all.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

SUPER-VISE, v. } Lat. Super, and visus, SUPERVISING, n. } past part. of videre, to SUPERVISOR. } To see or look over;

 to overlook, oversee; to superintend; to survey.
 The folio Shakespeare reads Supervision.

The small time I supervis'd the glass-house, I got among those Venetians some smatterings of the Italian tongue.

Howell, b. i. Let. 3.

(An exact command) that on the supernize no leasure bated,
 No not to stay the grinding of the axe,
 My head should be struck off.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 2.

Oth. Would? nay, and I will.

Iago. And may: but how? how satisfied, my lord?

Would you, the super-visor, grossly gape on

Id. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

Who, having had the special supervision of the whole Asian church, was, by the spirit of God, commanded to direct his vii epistles to the bishops of those seven famous churches, by the name of so many angels.

Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right.

[They] are deputed to write a discourse to that purpose, with the inspection and supervision of my lord bishop.

Hales. Remaines. Letter from the Synod of Dort.

For this were there appointed Altingius Steinius, the assessors and scribes; and for supervisors were named D. Davenant, Præses. This is the summe of that session.

Hales. Remaines. Letter from the Synod of Dort.

M. Bayle speaks of the vexation of the supervising of the press, in terms so feeling that they move compassion.

Congreve.

In a word he is set forth, as operator and manager, director and supervisor over all the works of God, shedding his rich blessings, and distributing his bounties through the whole creation.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

SUPERVIVE, v. i. e. Survive, (qv.)

I beseech you, if the soul be such a substance as is incapable of being hurt by so great a change and dissolution as is caused in us by a violent death, suppose by fire, upon what principle can it be imagined to be naturally mortal; or what revolutions in nature will it not be able to resist and survive.—Clarke. Letter to Mr. Dodwell.

The sick man feels him in the refreshment which he yet enjoys by his provision; he survives in the heart of the afflicted, which still resents the comfort, and rejoices in the ease which he procured him.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

SUPINE. } It. Supino; Lat. Supinus;
SUPINELY. } Gr. ὑπτιος, or the Lat. Supare, SUPINENESS. } or sipare, to lie. (See DISSI-SUPINITY. } PATE.) Opposed to the Lat.
Pronus.

Lying (with the face upwards); lying recumbent—reposing; lazy, indolent, inactive, inert, inanimate.

God by a special dispensacion brake of the course of his life ere all things were brought to a full perfection, because he would declare hymself to have appoynted your Maestie, not to lyue altogether in a careless supinitie, but in a perpetuall exercise of all princely vertues.

Udal. Erasmus, vol. i. Pref.

I will not yeeld thy worth so meane a praise,
More pure, more chaste, more sainted than are plaies,
Nor with that dull supinenesse to be read,
To passe a fire, or laugh an houre in bed.

F. Beaumont. An Elegy upon Mr. F. Beaumont.

The fourth [cause of error] is a supinily or neglect of enquiry, even of matters whereof we doubt; rather believing, then going to see, or doubting with ease and gratis, then believing with difficulty or purchase.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 5.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles:
Such whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epocha mistakes.

Dryden. Astræa Redux.

Black was the covering too, where lay the god
And slept supine, his limbs display'd abroad.

Id. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

— Wilt thou then repine
To labour for thyself? and rather choose
To lie supinely, hoping heaven will bless Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd?

Philips. Cider, b. i.

But who shall assure us who shall do it, if we suffer ourselves to fall into such circumstances by our own supineness, or, what is worse, perverseness?

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 403.

Thus religion, when planted in a country, is left to the natural course of things; and if that country grow supine, and does not cherish the blessing, it must take on itself the consequence.—Gilpin, vol. iii. Ser. 45.

A common soldier who by various toils
And perils gain'd a competence in spoils,
At night fatigu'd while he supinely snor'd,
Lost to a farthing his collected hoard.

Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ep. 2.

If, indeed, the little improvement they apparently derive from such perfunctory lectures arises from their own supineness, themselves only are justly culpable; but I suspect their very supineness usually arises from the indifference and dullness of the tutor's manner.

Knox. Liberal Education, § 43.

SUPPAGE. See SUP.

SUPPALPATION. Lat. Sup-palpari, to touch gently under (sub, and palpari. See PALPABLE); to caress.

Caress, persuasion, enticement.

Let neither bugbs of feare, nor suppalpations of favour weaken your hands from laying load upon the beast of error.

Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

Thou art a courtier, and hast laid a plot to rise: if obsequious servility to the great, if those gifts in the bosom which our blunt ancestors would have termed bribes, if plausible suppalpations, if restless importunities will hoise thee, thou wilt mount.—Id. Ser. Ps. cvii. 34.

SUPPARASITATION. Lat. Supparasitari, to play the parasite (sub-parasitus, Gr. Παρασιος, food,) one who flatters for the sake of food. Flattery, servile assent, or approbation.

But if truth be the mother of hatred, shee is the daughter of time, and truth hath learn't this of time, to devour her owne brood; so that in time truth shall consume hatred; and at last, a galling truth shall have more thanks, than a smoothing supparasitation.—Bp. Hall. The best Bargaine.

When a man basely subjects himselfe to serve the humors of the great, by grosse supparasitation, by either unjust or unfit actions and offices; yielding himselfe a slave to the times, a pander to vice. This is a servile humility.

Id. The Fall of Pride.

SUPPEDA'NEOUS. Lat. Suppedaneum, a footstool.

Being under the foot, (sub-pedem.)

Suetonius delivereth of Germanicus, that he had slender legs, but encreased them by riding after meals; that is, the humours descending upon their pendulosity, they having no support or suppedaneous stability.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 13.

SUPPEDITATE, v. } Fr. Suppéditer; It.
SUPPEDITATION. } Suppeditare; Sp. Sup-

peditar; Lat. Suppeditare, to supply, sup-petere, or sub pedes, to put under foot; and, perhaps, to lay at the feet; and, thus, to lay before, to present.

To furnish, to afford; in Hall—to put under foot, to put down, to suppress, to subdue.

But also [Hen. VII.] repressed and suppeditate the cyuile dissencion and interior stryfe in maner as he woulde haue wysht it.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 2.

Because those things which there is a logical possibility for us to do, and strength sufficient suppeditated, is not yet morally possible to do all our lives long, without any default.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 572.

Which answer, as also the former, is applicable to apoplexies, catalepsies, and whatever other diseases partake of their nature, and witness how nimble the soul is to act upon the suppeditation of due matter.

SUPPLA'NTING, n. } To remove the prop or support from under; to cause to fall; to overthrow, to overturn; to bring to the ground; to turn out, to displace; and, consequentially, to take the place of.

For supplant with his slye cast
Full ofte hapneth for to mowe Thyng, whiche another man hath sowe,
And maketh common of proprettee
With sleight, and with subtiltee.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

But thei that worchen by supplant
Yet wolden suche a man supplant,
And take a part of thilke plant,
Whiche he hath for him selfe set.—Id. Ib.

My sonne yet there is the fiste,
Whiche is conceiued of enule,
And cleped is supplantarie:
Through whose compassment and gile
Ful many hath loste his while
In loue, as wel as other wise.—Id. Ib.

And if thou vnderstode in sooth,
In loues cause what it dooth,
A man to ben a supplantour,
Thou woldest for thyn owne honour
By double waie take kepe.—Id. Ib.

The mighty God of Jacob be with you to supplant his enemies.—Tyndall. Works, p. 456.

For he is practized well in policie,
And thereto doth his courting most applie:
To learne the enterdeale of princes strange,
To marke th' intent of counsells, and the change
Of states, and eke of private men somewhile,
Supplanted by fine falshood and faire guile.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

I that have stood your flatteries, your threats,
Borne up against your fierce temptations; scorn'd
The cruel means you practised to supplant me,
Having no arms to help me to hold out
But love of piety, and constant goodness.

And this, in the judgment of some, is to be a man of business; that is, in other words, to be a plague and a spy, a treacherous supplanter and underminer of the peace of all families and societies.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

That sad disunion and jealousy, those divisions and supplantings that were among the king's own friends.

Headly. Ser. 30 Jan. 1717-18.

— Mansions once

Knew their own masters; and laborious hinds,
Who had surviv'd the father, serv'd the son.
Now the legitimate and rightful lord
Is but a transient guest, newly arriv'd,
As soon to be supplanted.—Cowper. Task, b. iii.

R. Gloucester, p. 223.

"Looke fro pride thou keepe thee wele,
For thou mailest both perceiue and feele,
That pride is both folly and sin
And that pride hath him within,
Ne may his herte in no wise,
Meken me souplen to seruice."—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Be not afraid, ye haue salues inoughe to souple that sore.
Fryth. Workes, p. 79.

Like alabaster fair and sleek,
But soft and supple sattin-like.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

For he that shadows heaven with clouds, loves both, as his delights:
And she that supples earth with bloud, can not forbear your sights.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

Arm. Welcome; thou com'st in season, reverend man,
To pour the balsam of a suppling patience
Into the festering wound of ill-spent fury.

Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iv. sc. 1.

Give me the plump Venetian, fat, and lusty,
That meets me soft and supple; smiles upon me,
As if a cup of full wine leapt to kiss me.

Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act i. sc. 2.

Pen. Oh the most precious vanity of this world;
When such dry'd neats-tongues must be soak'd and larded
With young fat supple venches.

Id. Women Pleas'd, Act iii. sc. 2.

The continuall shade increaseth the leaves, and abateth the fruit; which nevertheless is of a pleasaunt taste; and that (no doubt) is caused by the suppleness and gentleness of the juyce of that plant, being that which maketh the boughs also so flexible.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 610.

These taper fingers too, and even joynts, so supple, that methinks I mould 'em as they pass through mine.

Dryden. The Assignment, Act ii. sc. 2.

This gives the mind a freedom, and the exercising the understanding in the several ways of inquiry and reasoning, which the most skilful have made use of, teaches the mind sagacity and weariness, and a suppleness to apply itself more closely and dexterously to the bents and turns of the matter in all its researches.

Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 19.

Nature may have prepared one man for a dancer by giving him strength and suppleness in his joints.

Stackhouse. History of the Bible.

His [Newton's] method, as well in these his critical as in his physical inquiries, was to form the principal members of his demonstration with an unornamental brevity, and leave the supplial of the unconnected parts to his reader's sagacity.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 5.

But what is alone sufficient to strike us with horror at so wretched an inhumanity, is the consideration of those numerous disorders of body, those maladies, to which a restless application of all their faculties for the supplial of our imaginary, and therefore endless wants, perpetually subject the industrious poor.—Id. Ib. vol ix. Ser. 4.

— Are they not all proofs

That man, immur'd in cities, still retains His inborn inextinguishable thirst
Of rural scenes, compensating his loss
By supplemental shifts, the best he may?

Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Why are usefull things good? because they minister to the supply of our wants and desires. Why is this supply

The destruction of Mustapha, was so fatall to Solymans line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman, untill this day, is suspected to be untrue, and of strange bloud; for that Selymus the second was thought to be supposititious.—Bacon. Ess. Of Empire.

Suppositiously he derives it from the Lunæ Montes 15 degrees south.—Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 31.

So that at the most you can infer from hence but only a suppositive necessity of having an infallible guide and that grounded upon a false supposition, in case we had not scripture.—Chillingworth. The Religion of Protestants, pt. ii. c. 2.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively.—Hammond.

Rhe. Mountebanks, empirics, quack-salvers, mineralists, wizards, alchemists, cast apothecaries, old wives and barbers, are all suppositors to the right worshipful doctor, as I take it.—Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act i. sc. 2.

The same man still, but evermore fantastical,
As being the suppositor to laughter.

Id. The Fancies Chaste & Noble, Act iii. sc. 1.

They [onions] keepe the bodie loose and laxative, yea, and open the hæmorrhoid veines, if they be put up in manner of suppositories.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 5.

The seemingly disjointed method of that book is by many much cavilled at; to which, were the supposal a truth, I might reply that the book of grace doth but therein resemble the book of nature.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 270.

Unless we could reasonably suppose God to be more pleased with one innocent man or angel than he is displeased with a world of guilty sinners, which is hardly supposable, we could have no just ground to hope that the cries of the one's intercessions should be more prevalent with him than the cries of the other's guilt.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

I am sure his reason, by which he would persuade you to become a convert to their church, is shewed to be no reason, because it proceeds upon this false supposition, that the church of Rome was once the catholic church, which it never was.—Sharp. Ser. vol. vii. Answer to Questions.

Men and angels, indeed, have also a certain knowledge of them; but it is not absolute, but only suppositional; that is, upon supposal that such and such things continue in their being, and that God withal affords them his ordinary concurrence, such and such effects will certainly follow.

South, vol. ix. Ser. 11.

We shall premise this observation, or rather suspicion of our own; that there seem to be some Orphick verses supposititious, as well as there were Sibylline; they being counterfeited either by Christians or Jews.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 300.

And behind all these, clysters, suppositors, and a barbarous pothecary's bill, more inhuman than a taylor's.

Dryden. Sir Martin Marr-all, Act iv.

But, though every one of these things is rationally supposable, yet Scripture only can satisfy us, that they are true in fact; and so accordingly it fully doth.

Secker, vol. i. Ser. 17.

It being exactly similar to that unanswerable one which Mr. Locke declares himself to be sufficient against their [ideas] being innate. For the supposition is unnecessary.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. i. c. 2.

As to continuatives, they are either suppositive, such as—if; or positive, such as—because, therefore, as, &c.

Harris. Hermes, b. ii. c. 2.

The suppositives denote connexion, but assert not actual existence.—Id. Id.

It may seem at first somewhat strange, why the positive conjunctions should have been considered subordinate to the suppositive, which by their antient names appears to have been the fact. Is it, that the positive are confined to what actually is: the suppositive extend to possibles, nay even as far as to impossibles?—Id. Id.

SUPPRESS, v.

SUPPRESS, n.

SUPPRESSIVE.

Fr. Supprimer, suppression; It. Sopprimere, soppressione; Sp. Supprimir, suppression; Lat. Suppressum, past part. of supprimere, to press down, (sub, and primere.)

To press down; to keep or hold down; to keep low; to keep down or from rising; to subdue, to subject; to keep down or out of sight; to secrete, to hide, to conceal.

It sheweth well that thou art not wise,
But suppressed with a manere of rage,
To take on thee this surquedous message.

Chaucer. The Story of Thebes.

If sodaine hope by feare opprest,
If feare by hope supprest againe,
Be prouces that loue within the brest
Hath bound the heart with fancies chaine.

Turberville. The Louer confesseth him selfe to be Loue, &c.

Forsooth quod I, & he hædeleth the sacramēt of baptisme not much better. For he magnifyeth baptisme but to the suppression of penance & of al good liuing.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 250.

Thus as he led the beast along the way,
He spide far off a mighty gyautesse
Fast flying, on a courser dappled gray,
From a bold knight, that with great hardnesse
Her hard pursewd, and sought for to suppresse.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

And so taken as much as an hazell nut, it amendeth the suppression or difficultie of avoiding urine.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 25.

— In brake great Hercules

To our sad confines of late yeeres, and wholly did suppresse
Our haplesse princes.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

No affliction, no poverty, no wretchedness of condition can totally suppress it.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 4.

The suppression of idolatry in the Roman empire, and the establishment of the christian church upon its ruins, was an event the most wonderful in the Gentile world, to which nothing but the power of God was adequate.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Johnson gives us expressive and oppressive, but neither impressive or suppressive, though proceeding as obviously from their respective sources.—Seward, Let. 2.

SUPPURATE, v.

SUPPURATE, n.

SUPPURATIVE, n.

Fr. Suppurer, to suppurate; pure. Suppuré, suppured, suppuratif, suppurative, adj. (Cotgrave.) It. Suppurare; Sp. Suppurar, to bring or bear (pus) corrupt matter below.

To bear, to produce, to issue—corrupt matter.

The inner flesh or pulpe [gourd] cleansed from the seed, is passing good for to be laid unto those impostumes or swellings, that grow to an head or suppuration (which the Greeks call Apostemata).—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 3.

In the space of three weeks it suppurated it, and fretted a hole, by which the matter burst forth.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. iv. c. 4.

There remaining some hardness after the discharge of matter, I applied again the Mæagma, which caused a suppuration of the remainder: which being permitted to flow forth, I dressed it with lenients.—Id. Id.

I applied over the whole tumour some of the suppuratives set down in the method of cure.—Id. Id.

SUPPUTE, v.

SUPPUTATE, v.

SUPPUTATION.

Fr. Supputation; Lat. Supputare. See TO COMPUTE.

To count or compute; to reckon, to calculate.

— They had vow'd revenge, and proclamation made
That in a learned war the foe they would invade,
And like stout floods stand free from this supputed shame.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 29.

Now therefore listen what mine author saith, whose addition, though by his own supputation of yeares it require to be placed elsewhere; yet for the consonance of the matter, and because writers varie greatly in their accounts of time, I haue here inserted the same, as in a verie conuenient place of the historie.

Holinshed. Chronicles. Rich. II. an. 1393.

Moreover the 21 of September (after the supputation of Cæsar) the knot of the two fishes, a signe or star so called, goeth downe to our sight in Italie.

Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 31.

One of them Ephemerides written for the year 1582 I have seen, supputed especially for the elevation and meridian of London, but may generally serve for all England.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

A chronography, with a supputation of the years from the beginning of the world unto the birth of Christ, and continued from the birth of Christ unto the twelfth year of the reign of Mauritius the emperor, being the full time of 600 years, wanting five, after Christ.—Id. Id.

It is true according to the doctor's supputation.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 610.

SUPRA. See SUPER.

SUPRA-LAPSARIAN. Lat. Supra, above, anterior, and lapsus, fallen.

Anterior, or antecedent to the Fall.

The sublapsarian way seemed to me of the two the more moderate, rational and agreeable to the goodness, and justice of God: for the rigid supralapsarian doctrine could never find entertainment in my thoughts from first to last.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 669.

There are one sort of Calvin's scholars, whom we for distinction's sake call Supra-lapsarians, who are so fierce in their sentences of predestination and reprobation—that they say God looked upon mankind, only, as his creation, and his slaves, over whom he having absolute power, was very gracious that he was pleased to take some few, and save them absolutely; and to the other part he did no wrong, though he was pleased to damn them eternally, only because he pleased; for they were his own; and Qui jure suo utitur, nemini facit injuriam, says the law of reason, Every one may do what he please with his own.

Bp. Taylor. Deus Justificatus.

SUPRA-MUNDANE. Lat. Supra, and mundus.

Above the world.

Aristotle and the later Platonists supposed the world and all the inferior gods (as Plato and the Pythagoreans, some supramundane delities) to proceed, by way of emanation, without any temporary production, from a superior cause: that is, they believed them to be necessary, but not self-existent.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 86.

SUPRA-VISOR. See SUPERVISOR.

The laws of Sparta forbad any man to be twice admiral; but when their affairs required it, they made Aræus titular, and Lysander supravisor of him, and admiral to all real and effective purposes.—Bp. Taylor, Ser. 23.

SUPREME.

SUPREME, n.

SUPREMACY.

Fr. Suprême; It. Supremo; Sp. Supremo; Lat. Supremus, highest, loftiest; from super, above. See SOVEREIGN, SUMMIT.

Highest, loftiest; above or over all; most eminent; most excellent, most elevated or exalted—in station, in power, in rank.

What thyng occasioned the shoures of rayne
Of fyre elementar in his supreme spere.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

I [Ronstal] made search in the said treasury, where I fortun'd to find many writings for the supremacy of the king to the realm of Scotland; and among others also, a writing with very many seals of arms of Scots, confessing the right of the supremacy to the king of England.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. pt. ii. b. i. No. 9.

Yet sure he could not mean to have peace with those,
Who did in that supreme degree offend.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Then Pallas breath'd in Tydeus sonne: to render whom supream

To all the Greekes, at all his parts, she cast a hotter beame,
On his high minde; his body fill'd, with much superiour might,

And made his compleate armour cast, a farre more complete light.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

I see ye visibly, and now believe
That he the supreme Good, to whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd.—Milton. Comus.

— Ay me, they little know
How deadly I abide that boast so vaine,
Under what torments inwardly I groane;
While they adore me on the throne of hell,
With diadem and scepter high advanc'd
The lower still I fall, onely supream
In miserie; such ioy ambition findes.

Id. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

And there they saw the soule of Thetis son;
Of good Patroclus; braue Antilochus,
And Ajax; the supremely strenuous
Of all the Greeke hoast.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

This wound to them thus violently given,
Envy at me her sharpest darts did rove,
Affecting the supremacy of heaven
As the first giants warring against Jove Heap'd hills on hills.—Drayton. Legend of Tho. Cromwell.

For when to fate he bows, each Grecian dame
With just reproach was licens'd to defame;
Should he long honour'd in supreme command,
Want the last duties of a daughter's hand.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

I am allow'd, as Fame reports, to know
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow
Of Lebanon, nodding supremely tall,
To creeping moss and hyssop on the wall.

Prior. Solomon, b. i.

That your lordship is formed by nature for this supremacy,
I could easily prove (were it not already granted by the world,) from the distinguishing character of your writings.

Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

Yet above all his luxury supreme,
And his chief glory, was the gospel theme;
There he was copious as old Greece or Rome,
His happy eloquence seem'd there at home.

Cowper. Conversation.

The oath of supremacy is principally calculated as a renunciation of the pope's pretended authority.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 10.

SUR-ADDITION. (Sur, i. e. super.)

An addition to or upon.

— His father
Was call'd Sicilius, who did ioyne his honor
Against the Romanes, with Cassibulan,
He had his titles by Tenantius, whom
He seru'd with glory, and admir'd successe;
So gain'd the sur-addition, Leonatus.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 1.

SURAL. Fr. Surale, a great vein in the bought of the knee, (Cotgrave.)

A sedentary young gentleman, of an ill habit of body, was wounded by a penknife in the inside of the calf of his leg into the sural artery.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 2.

SURBASE. } Fr. Surbaisse, something above, SURBASSED. } having something above the base.

Long have these mighty monsters known disgrace,
Yet still some trophies hold their ancient place;
Where, round the hall, the oak's high surbase rears
The field day triumphs of two hundred years.

Langhorne. The Country Justice.

Nor must you conclude any thing from Roger's own tomb, which has (I remember) a wide surbased arch with scalloped ornaments, &c.—Gray. Let. 44. Dec. 1762.

SURBATE, v. Fr. Surbature, a surbating, (Cotgrave.)

To beat upon, (sc.) the road or way; to batter, to bruise; to weary.

Soone as they bene arriv'd upon the brim
Of the rich strand, their charrets they forlore,
And let their temed fishes softly swim
Along the margent of the fomy shore,
Least they their finnes should bruze, and surbate sore
Their tender feete upon the stony ground.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

As when a beare and tygre, being met
In cruell fight on Lybicke ocean wide,
Espye a traveller with feet surbet,
Whom they in equall pray hope to divide,
They stint their strife, and him assayle on everie side.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Along thy way thou canst not but descry
Fair glittering halls to tempt the hopeful eye,
Thy right eye 'gins to leap for vaine delight,
And surbet toes to tickle at the sight.

Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 2.

Their march being continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them; however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated.—Clarendon. Civil Wars.

SURCEA'SE, v. } Fr. Sur, and cesser, to SURCEA'SE, n. } cease, (qv.) Lat. Cessare.
SURCEA'SANCE. } To cease, to leave, to quit, to discontinue, to desist or forbear to do, or from doing, any thing; to end or put an end to,
to stay, to stop or put a stop to.

I surcesse anye fether to traicte of this matier, lest I might seme to speake as myne owne frende, whiche in dede I dooe not.—Udal. Erasmus, Pref. p. xx.

He therfor seased that kyngdom, and ioyned it to his owne of West Saxons, by whiche reason the kyngdome of Mercia surcesed, that had contynued frome theyr firste kyng named Penda.—Fabyan. Chronicle, c. 171.

Forsomuch as he surcesed not to perpetuate enormous and inordinate crimes, he was therefore cast into the Tower, and from thence was brought to Oxford.

State Trials. 1 Mary, an. 1553. Cranmer.

And that which is for ladies most befitting,
To stint all strife, and foster friendly peace,
Was from those dames so farre and so unfitting,
As that instead of praying them surcesse,
They did much more their cruelty encrease.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

"And for th' impossibility of peace
And reconcilment, which my lord objects;
I think when dying injury shall cease,
(The cause pretended) then surcesse th' effects."

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

— If th' assassination
Could trammell vp the consequence, and catch
With his surcesse, successe.

Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 7.

It is no more than time that there were an end and surcesse made of this immodest and deformed manner of writing lately entertained, whereby matter of religion is handled in the stile of the stage.

Bacon. Of Church Controversies.

The ambassadors of our brother, the French king, have instructions to propound two things, 1. A surcesance of arms, 2. An imperial diet.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 497.

— Then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock; no way, or rule,
Be unassay'd; prevent the morning star
Assiduous, nor with the western sun
Surcesse to work.

J. Phillips. Cider, b. i.

The nations, overaw'd, surcesd the fight,
Immoveable their bodies, fixt their sight.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xii.

SURCHA'RGE, v. } Fr. Surcharge, sur- SURCHA'RGE, n. } charger; It. Sopra-car- ricare; Sp. Sobre-cargar.

To over-charge, to overload, to overburthen; to lay charge upon charge; load or burthen upon load or burthen.

For if this graine be buried over deepe and surcharged, it is not able to breake through against the weight of the earth, but in steed of rising up, the new chit turneth and bendeth backward under the ground.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 10.

What Nature's self would bound in little space,
Art to precipitate doth meanes contrive:
Else th' earth surcharg'd would starve her nurslings soon,
Too populous mankind by it selfe undone.

Stirling. Domes-day. Fifth Houre.

Who [Nature] would be quite surcharg'd with her own weight,
And strangled with her waste fertility.—Milton. Comus.

For that the air, after it hath received a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite, as it doth the first charge.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 228.

Cramme not in people, by sending too fast company after company, but rather hearken how they waste, and send supplies proportionably; but so, as the number may live well, in the plantation, and not by surcharge be in penury.

Id. Ess. Of Plantations.

— Surcharg'd
And in his course obstructed by large spoil,
The river flows redundant, and attacks
The lingering remnant with unusual tide.

J. Philips. Blenheim.

— There on well-fuel'd hearth they chat,
Whilst black pots walk the round with laughing ale Surcharg'd.

Id. Cerealia, (1706.)

In stalls at hand their harness'd coursers stood,
By plenteous cribs surcharg'd with generous food.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xii.

Another disturbance of common is by surcharging it; or putting more cattle therein than the pasture and herbage will sustain, or the party hath a right to do.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 16.

SUR-CINGLE. } It. Sopraccinglia; sur, SURCINGLED. } i. e. super, and cingulum, a girdle. See CINCTURE.

The upper or outer girth or girdle,—surrounding the outer garments,—the whole burthen.

Is't not a shame to see each homely groome
Sit perched in an idle chariot roome,
That were not meete some pannel to bestride,
Sursingled to a galled hackney's hide?

Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 6.

Cap. Prince, by your leave I'll have a sursingle
And male you like a hawke.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act v.

SURCLE. } Lat. Surculus, which Vossius SURCULATION. } suggests may have been derived from surg-ere, to arise.

A shoot, a sprig, a sprout.
Surculation,—removing shoots or sprigs; lopping, pruning.

And therefore [the miseltoe] sprouteth not forth in boughs and surcles of the same shape, and similar unto the tree that beareth it; but in a different form.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

When insition and grafting, in the text, is applied unto the olive tree, it hath an emphatical sense, very agreeable unto that tree, which is best propagated this way; not at all by surculation.—Id. Miscell. p. 47.

SUR-COAT. Fr. Surcot, an upper kirtle, or garment worn over a kirtle, (Cotgrave.)

An upper or outer coat.

The surcotes white of veluet wele sitting
They were in clad.—Chaucer. The Flower and the Leaf.

[I purposing to be briefe, will omitt the royall habits of kings at their coronation] the surcoate, mantle, hood and collar of the order of the Garter, &c.

Camden. Remains. Apparell.

His surcoat was a bear-skin on his back.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

His crest a broken yoke, and in his shield
Red flames he bore, upon a yellow field:
With flames his surcoat was embroider'd o'er.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xlii.

SUR-CREW. Fr. Surcroist.

A surplusage, over-measure, vantage, addition,
amends, (Cotgrave.)

Since I last saw you, I have been confined to my chamber by a quotidian fever;—It had once left me as I thought;
but it was only to fetch more company, returning with a surcrew of the splenetic vapours that are called Hypochondriacal.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 361.

SURD. Fr. Sourd; Lat. Surdus. See ABSURD.

Deaf, hard of hearing, or that cannot hear;
generally, insensate.

But her [Nature] will was, and shee thought it good, to insert and engraffe in their inward bowels holesome medicines for mans health, to countrepoise those medicinable vertues which shee had engraven and bestowed upon those surd and senseless hearbs.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 13.

SURE. } Fr. Seure, sureté; It. Sicuro;
SURELY. } Sp. Seguro; Lat. Securus. See SUREMENT. } SECURE and ASSURE.
SURENESS. } Careless, or free from care
SURETY. } or fear; careless, heedless, con-SURETYSHIP. } fident; free from doubt or hazard; certain, firm, trustworthy, constant, safe;
firmly believing or thinking; fully convinced.

And I pray you let me speke with your adversaries in privee place, for they shuln not knowe that it be of youre will or youre assent; and than, when I knowe hir will and hir entente, I may conseele you the more surely.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibee.

And he shal han Cundance in mariage,
And certain gold, I n'ot what quantitee,
And hereto finden sufficient suretee.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4683.

I you relese, madame, into your hond
Quit every surement and every bond.
Id. The Frankleines Tale, v. 11,837.

And than yt case once graunted, ye deduce your conclusion very suretye.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 215.

If oure lande bee a thyng of more suretie than oure money, howe happeth it than, that in this persecucion we be more ferde to lese it? For yf it be a thing of more suretye, than can it not so sone be loste.—Id. Ib. p. 1219.

Cassibulan wt a stronge hooste of Brytons encoûtred the Romaynes, gyyunge or yeldyng to theym suche fyght and battayll that they were fayne to resorte to their shypes for theyr suretye.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 48.

For they be two the prowest knights on ground
And oft approv'd in many hard assay;
And eke of surest steele, that may be fownd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Witnesse may Burbon be; whom all the bands,
Which may a knight assure, had surely bound,
Untill the love of lordship and of lands
Made him become most faithlesse and unsound.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 12.

Neither waves, nor theeves, nor fire,
Nor have rots impor'd this sire,
Suretiship, nor yet
Was the usurer helping on
With his damn'd extortion,
Nor the chaines of debt.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 3.

Death cancels Nature's bonds, but for our deeds
(That debt first paid) a strict account succeeds;
If here not clear'd, no suretiship can bail
Condemned debtors from th' eternal jail.
Denham. Of Prudence.

— Thou sure-steel'd sternness
Give us this day good hearts, good enemies,
Good blowes o'both sides, wounds that fear or flight
Can claim no share in.
Beaumont & Fletcher. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 1.

Surely, our lips cannot be better employed, than in praising God for such mighty benefits, as these, and for the blessed hand, through which he conveys them!
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 8.

It shows indeed, supposing they took up this practice as a matter of duty, that they were in doubt which was the right way they were obliged to keep, and therefore for sureness they would keep both.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 13.

So that now we have not only God's word, but also the suretiship of our Saviour to depend upon.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

And thus that safe and sure-footed interpreter, Alex.
Aphrodisius, expounds his master's meaning.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 170.

The apostle to comfort the Thessalonian bretheren concerning their deceased friends, reminds them of the resurrection; and tells them, that those that were already dead would as surely have their part in a happy immortality as the Christians that should be living at the time of our Lord's coming.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 1.

You know as well as I, how many come as sureties for children, who are themselves as ignorant of all the duties of religion, as the very children whom they represent.
Gilpin, vol. iii. Ser. 23.

SURF. “Fr. Surflotter, to float or swim upon.
Surflot, the rising of billow upon billow; or the interchanged swelling of several waves.” (Cot-grave.)

See the the quotation from Goldsmith.

The wind blew so strong upon the shore, and occasioned such a surf, that it was impossible for the boat to land.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 2.

In our way we came to one of the few places where access to the island is not guarded by a reef, and consequently a high surf breaks upon the shore.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 13.

The rising of the waves against the shore, is called by mariners the surf of the sea; and in shipwrecks is generally fatal to such as attempt to swim on shore.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. i. c. 17.

SURFACE. Fr. Sur-face; i. e. Superficie, (qv.) the upper face.
The upper face, outward or exterior part;
(met.) the first shew or appearance.

And with stern Æolus' blasts, like Thetis waxing rank,
She only over-swells the surface of hir bank.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

Which of us, who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould whereon we stand,
This continent of spacious Heav'n, adorn'd
With plant, fruit, flower ambrosial, gems and gold.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

The aged earth aghast,
With terror of that blast,
Shall from the surface to the center shake.
Id. Christ's Nativity.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

These common appearances are large discoloured spots dispersed over the whole surface of the body.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 10.

Such characters as have nothing but external accomplishments to recommend them, may indeed be greatly admired and approved by vain and weak understandings, which penetrate no deeper than the surface.
Knox. Liberal Education, § 36.

His passions like th' wat'ry stores that sleep
Beneath the smiling surface of the deep,
Wait but the lashes of a wintry storm,
To frown and roar, and shake his feeble form.
Cowper. Hope.

SURFEIT, v. Fr. Surfaire; It. Sopraffare, SURFEIT, n. (super-facere,) to over-do.
SURFEITER. The Eng. Surfeit is—SURFEITING, n. To overdo, to overload, to overcharge, (sc.) the stomach; the powers of digestion.

Surfeit, the noun, is also applied to the consequences of an overcharged stomach; the feeling of satiety, of disgust.

— On mornes long to lie,
Surfeyte in euenyng. R. Brunne, p. 311.

Let nat Syre Sorfail. sitten at thy borde.
Piers Plouhman, p. 142.

Zelmaue thought it not good for his stomach to receive a surfeit of too much favour.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Fastyng is to absteyne from surfeting, or ouer much eat-yng, from dronkenness, and care of the world.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 81.

If the same head-ach come by occasion of drunkennesse or a surfet of wine, they would be applied with vinegre.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 18.

— All start vp, and to bed;
No more would watch, when sleepe so surfeted
Their leaden ey-lids.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

Too much a surfeit breeds, and may our child annoy:
These fat and luscious meats do but our stomachs cloy.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 15.

— Menas, I did not thinke
This amorous surfetter would haue donn'd his helme
For such a pettie warre; his souldiership
Is twice the other twaine.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 1.

Kill not her quick'ning pow'r with surfeitings;
Mar not her sense with sensuality:
Cast not her wit on idle things,
Make not her free will slave to vanity.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, § 34.

A grown person surfeting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach, and he cannot bear the very idea of it.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 33.

Instead of one reasonable flesh-meal, they were now scarcely satisfied with three, each of them too so prodigious in quantity, as would at another time have produced a fever or surfeit.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 2.

He who before pamper'd himself with all sorts of delicacies even to surfeting, would now be glad of any sort of food in the world, even of husks, if he could get them.
Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

Not to enjoy the blessings of providence when they are mercifully placed before us, but to refuse them with sullen insensibility, is probably no less displeasing to our benefactor, than to surfeit and injure ourselves by excessive indulgence.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 20.

SURFEL. “To surphule or surfel the cheeks, is to wash them with mercurial or sulphur water,
as it was called: one of those pernicious compounds which, under the name of cosmetics, found their way to the ladies' toilets,” (Gifford,) whose explanation does not extend to the passage from Skelton.

Of broken warkes wrought many a goodly thing
In castyng, in turnyng, in florishing of floures,
With burres rowgh and buttons surfyllyng
In nedyl warke raysyng byrdes in boures.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

As for thy painted pale, and wrinkles surfled vp:
Are deare ynough, for such as lust to drinke of euery cup.
Gascoigne. A Challenge to Beautie.

She shall no oftener powder her hair, surfell her cheeks, cleanse her teeth, or conform the hairs of her eye-brows, &c.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act ii. sc. 1.

SURFLEW. See the quotation; and also FLUE.

What usually are termed therein [the Granvil coat of arms] rests, being the handles of spears (most honourable in tilting to break them nearest thereunto) are called by some criticks surflews, being the necessary appendants to organs conveying wind unto them—if, (as it seemeth) their dubious form as represented in the scutcheon doth, ex æque, answer to both.—Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

SURGE, v. See INSURGE. The Fr. Sour-SURGE, n. geon is,—the spring of a fountain,
SURGEFUL. or the rising, boyling or sprout-SURGELESS. ing out of water in a spring,
SURGY. (Cotgrave.) Lat. Surg-ere, to rise.
A rising, (sc.) of water or wave; a rising wave,
or billow.

It is sayd of trouth that al buyldynges are masoned and wroughte of dyuerse stones, and all great ryuers are gurged and assemblede of diuers surges and springes of water.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 1.

[This] made her frame her self, not truly with a surged joy, but with a determinate patience to let her husband think he had found a very gentle and supple-minded Zelmane.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

For louers sighes, sometimes take rest,
And lend their mindes a leaue to muse,
But mine are like the surging seas,
Whome calme nor quiet can appease.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholmew of Bathe.

If such as earst in cutting of the surge
By passing to the straunge and forraine lande
Bode bitter blast and scornful Neptunes scourge, Dreade not to take the like attempt in hande.
Turbervile. To the rayling Rout of Sycophants.

When I awaking all inragde doe baine my breast with streames,
And make my smokie sighes to skyes their vpwarde waie to take,
Thus with a surge of teares bedewde
(O bed) I thee forsake.
Id. The Louer to his carefull Bed, &c.

In surgesse seas of quiet rest when I
Seuen yearés had sail'd, a perrie did arise,
The blasts whereof abrig'd my libertie:
For whil'st I did with busie braine deuise
Them to destroy, which did my court despise,
The boistrous blasts of hatred blew a gale,
My cables crakt, my barke was bong'd with bale.
Mirror for Magistrates.

Who, all in rage, his sea-god syre besought
Some cursed vengeance on his sonne to cast:
From surging gulf two monsters streight were brought;
With dread whereof his chasing steedes aghast
Both charett swifte and huntsman overcast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

The Romans valiantness nor courage could ought prevaill, but they were driven to give them place (much like the rage of surging waves, or terrible trembling of the earth) rather than tarry to be troden under feet, and overthrown by them.—North. Plutarch, p. 341.

And there it [Charwell] issueth so fast at the verie surge, that it groweth into a pretie streame, in maner out of hand.
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 11.

Nature had framed them [mountaines] for her owne selfe;
partly to tame the violence of great rivers, and to brake the force of surging waves and inundations of the sea.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 1.

And streight they saw the raging surges reard
Up to the skies. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Like Thetis' goodly self majestically guides;
Upon her spacious bed tossing the surgeful tides.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 14.

I lie as open to the gusts of passion
As the bare shore to every beating surge.
Dryden. Marriage à la Mode, Act ii. sc. 1.

— The surging air receives
Its plummy burden; and their self-taught wings
Winnow the waving element. Thomson. Spring.

So when Ulysses plough'd the surgy main;
When now in view appear'd his native reign,
His wayward mates th' Æolian bag unbind,
Expecting treasures, but out rush'd a wind.
Broome. Epis. to Mr. E. Fenton, (1726.)

“ Say, royal youth, sincere of soul, report
What cause hath led you to the Spartan court?
Do public or domestic cares constrain
This toilsome voyage o'er the surgy main?”
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

Methinks I see thee straying on the beach
And asking of the surge, that bathes thy foot,
If ever it has wash'd our distant shore.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

 His crafte stode vpon surgerye.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Like a good surgeon he [God] putteth paine of tribulation vnto the sores of our sinne, because the synne cannot otherwyse bee rubbed out of the fleshe and cured.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 372.

Than incontynent they dysarmed hym, and dyd gette surgiens to dresse his wound, for they wold gladly that he might escaped; but he dyed the next day after.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 44.

Mist. What would you sir?
 Wild. I would craue a little rest lady,
 And for my hurts some surgerye.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Night-Walker, Act iii.

On the 20th of November, the captains of the squadron represented to the commodore, that their ships' companies were very sickly, and that it was their own opinions as well as their surgeons', that it would tend to the preservation of the men to let in more air between decks.

Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 4.

Their arts are few and simple; yet, if we may credit them, they perform cures in surgery, which our extensive knowledge in that branch, has not, as yet, enabled us to imitate.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

In the early ages of long life and temperance, men were still subject to the common accidents of wounds, bruises, and dislocations; this would soon raise surgery into an art.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 3.

If I had not known no application had been made to it, I should certainly have enquired, with a very interested curiosity, after the vulnerary herbs and surgical art of the country.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 9.

Spenser. The Shepherd's Calender. July.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead,
 Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
 Give warning to the world that I am fled
 From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell.

Shakespeare, Son. 81.

This was that P. Decius, who afterwards being consull together with that surly and imperious colleague of his [T. Mantilius] surnamed Imperiosus, devowed and yielded himselfe to all the divels of hell for the safetie of his armie, and the obtaining of victorie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 5.

And as for these soure surlings, they are to be commended to Sieur Gaulard.—Camden. Rem. Anagrammes.

Lycurgus their law-giver was so addicted to elegant learning, as to have been the first that brought out of Ionia the scatter'd works of Homer, and sent the poet Thales from

Crete to prepare and mollify the Spartan surliness with his smooth songs and odes, the better to plant among them law and civility.—Milton. Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.

Having been a person of a surly and proud nature, and offensive in word and action, he [Bridgwood] did a little before his death desire pardon and forgiveness of all the world, especially with several persons with whom he had any animosities.—Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. ii.

By the constant practice of which, our minds will be gradually cured of all that perverseness and surliness of temper, which indisposes us to the respective duties of our relations.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

Thus pale they meet; their eyes with fury burn;
 None greets; for none the greeting will return:
 But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care
 His foe profest, as brother of the war.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Here virtue thrives as in her proper soil;
 Not rude and surly, and beset with thorns,
 And terrible to sight, as when she springs
 (If e'er she spring spontaneous) in remote
 And barb'rous climes, where violence prevails,
 And strength is lord of all. Cowper. Task, b. i.

As in hose he could not get.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

The juice which trickles into these vessels, is collected by persons who climb the trees [the Fan-palm] for that purpose, morning and evening, and is the common drink of every individual upon the island; yet a much greater quantity is drawn off than is consumed in this use, and of the surplus they make both a syrup and coarse sugar.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

To take or catch upon (or, as Cotgrave expresses it, in the deed doing); to overtake, (sc.) unexpectedly, unawares; to come to, or upon; beyond expectation; to raise or excite the feelings or emotions, by sudden, unexpected, or unusual appearances. See the quotation from Cogan.

If Folly haue surprized thee,
Do so that it recouered be,
And be well ware to take no more Counsaille, that greeneuth after sore.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Penda that of this former victory was supprysyd with great pryde, came with his hoost into the boudis of Northumbir-lande, entending to sle Oswyn, as before he had slayne his brother Oswalde.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 134.

— When that disdainfull beast,
Encountring fierce, him suddein doth surprize;
And seizing cruell claws in trembling brest,
Under his lordly foot him proudly hath suppress.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

A tygre forth out of the wood did rise,
That with fell claws full of fierce gourmandize,
And greedy mouth wide-gaping like hell-gate,
Did runne at Pastorell her to surprize.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 10.

— The valiant Saxons came
Who sought by sea and land adventures far and near,
And seizing at the last upon the Britons here,
Surpriz'd the spacious isle, which still for theirs they hold.
Drayton. Poly-Olbiion, s. 4.

The libertie we giue the foe (alas) is ouer large,
Their camp is also mixt with ours, and we haue forth no
spies,
To learne their drifts; who may perchance this night intend surprise.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

Therefore from him Laertes sonne his vewe
Doth turne aside, and boasts his good event
In working of Strymonian Rhæus fall,
And efte in Dolons subtille surprysall.
Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

— O since that houre, that thy surprisall led From forth the faire wood, my sad feete; farre from my lov'd allies,
To famous Lemnos, where I found an hundred oxens prize
To make my ransome.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

The foes, surpris'd with wonder, stood aghast.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

Men, boys, and women, stupid with surprise,
Where'er she passes, fix their wondering eyes.
Id. Ib. b. viii.

A lesser calamity coming suddenly doth astonish more, than a far greater which hath been long expected; for, surprisals confound men's thoughts, daunt their spirits, and betray all the succours which reason offers.
Stillington. vol. i. Ser. 11.

The time agreed upon was such a night, when the sur- prisers were to be ready upon such a part of the wall, and to have ladders to mount in two places, where two soldiers were to be appointed for sentinels who were privy to the attempt.—Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. iii. p. 187.

The learned doctor produces a passage of Basil, which he renders thus very surprisingly; "We affirm that, according to the natural order of causes and effects, the Father must have the preeminence before the Son."
Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 312.

[The chart] was allowed by all Europe to be far completer in its geography than any that had till then been published, whilst it was at the same time most surprisingly exact in the quantity of variation assigned to the different parts of the globe.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 9.

The less faulty [are] surprisingly apt to be dissipated in a hurry of amusements, or plod on in worldly business without higher attentions.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 27.

Whatever presents itself in a sudden and unexpected manner, has, in most cases, a much greater effect upon us, than subjects of very superiour importance, for which we have been gradually prepared. The more sudden, that is, the greater the improbability of its appearing at that instant;
and the more unexpected, that is, the greater distance the train of thought was from the expectancy, the more violent will be the first percussio; and this circumstance will give peculiar energy to the exciting cause, whatever its peculiar complexion may be. A strong impulse is given, by the very mode of its appearance, previous to our being able to acquire a distinct knowledge of its nature. This impulse is the emotion we term surprise.—Cogan. Passions, pt. ii. c. 1. § 2.

And sente forth sourquidours. hus serjiauns of armes.
Piers Plouhman, p. 384.

Presumption, is whan a man undertaketh an emprise that him ought not to do, or elles that he may not do, and this is called surquidrie.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

It sheweth well that thou art not wise,
But suppressed with a manere of rage,
To take on thee this surquedous message.
Id. The Story of Thebes, b. ii.

Surquedrie is thilke vice
Of pride, whiche the thirde office
Hath in his courte, and will not knowe
The trouth. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For thy my sonne if thou wolt liue
In vertue, thou must vice eschewe,
And with lowe herte humblesse sewe,
So that thou be not surquedous. Id. Ib.

But in such selfe loue, thou seeme to wade so farre,
As fall to foule presumption, and iudge thy selfe a starre,
Beware betimes and thinke in our etymologie,
Such faults are plainly called pryde, and in french sur- cuydrye.—Gascoigne. Councell to Duglasse Duic.

There they beheld a mighty gyant stand
Upon a rocke, and holding forth on hie
An huge great paire of ballance in his hand,
With which he boasted in his surquedrie
That all the world he would weigh equallie,
If ought he had the same counterpoys.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

I must confess I have a great mind to be married.
Let. So have I too, a grudging of good will that way;
And would as fain be dispatched. But this Monsieur Quicksilver—

Ros. No, no: we'el bar him by and by,—and Main: let

There is no safety in his surquedrie.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act iii. sc. 1.

Oh, how I grieve, that late-born modesty
Hath got such root in easy waxen hearts
That men may not themselves their own good parts
Extol, without suspect of surquedry.
Donne. Letter to Mr. J. W.

SUR-REBU'TTER. } A rebutter or re-SURREJOINDER. } joinder, upon or in addition to, or in answer to a rebutter or rejoinder.

The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a surrejoinder;
upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a sur-rebutter.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 20.

SUR-REIN'ED. Nares thinks, not—injured in the reins; but—kept in the rein or bridle; and consequently ridden or worked too long; overworked.

A drench for sur-reyn'd iades, their barly broth,
Decoet their cold-blood to such valiant heat?
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 5.

Writes he not a good cordial sappy style?
A sur-rein'd jaded wit, but he rubs on.
Jack Drum's Entertainment, (1601.)

SUR-RE'NDER, v. } Old Fr. Surrender.
SURRE'NDER, n. } Sur, Lat. Super; and SURRE'NDRY. } Rendre, Lat. Rendere.
To render up; to yield up; to concede, to give up, to deliver, or give back again.

In the meane time his sonne tooke vpon him forthwith the administration of the empiere, went into Italie with an armie, would not surrender the state which he liked wel.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, p. 419.

In wretched prison long he did remaine,
Till they out-raigned had their utmost date,
And then therein resized was againe,
And ruled long with honorable state,
Till he surrendered realme and life to fate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Count Gondomar was on his way to Flanders, and thence to England (as they say) with a large commission to treat for a surrender of the Palatinate, and so to piece matters together againe.—Howell, b. i. Let. 10.

So spake our general mother, and with eyes
Of conjugal attraction unprov'd,
And meek surrender, half embracing leand
On our first father.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There could not be a better pawn for the surrendry of the Palatinate, than the Infanta in the Prince's arms, who could never rest till she did the work, to merit love of our nation.

Howell, b. i. Let. 26.

If we do not surrender our wills to the overtures of his goodness, we must submit our backs to the strokes of his anger.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

I then ordered a musquet to be fired over their heads, as the least exceptionable expedient to accomplish my design, hoping it would either make them surrender, or leap into the water.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 1.

The greatest resemblance of all lies in this—the never-falling protection and support afforded by the husband to the wife; and the abstraction of the affections from all other objects on the part of the wife, and the surrender of her whole heart and mind to the husband.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

SURREPTION. } Fr. Subreption, subreptif; SURREPTIVIOUS. } Lat. Sur-ripere (sub, and SURREPTIVIOUSLY. } rapere), to seize or take away, under (sc. cover).

Surreptitious,—taken under (sc.) cover or concealment; privily, by stealth, by fraud; taken fraudulently.

And if it shall to you appear, that any such apostolical dispensations shall be sufficient, effectual, and valid or invalid, ineffectual, unsufficient, surreptitious or arrepitious, or on any account null and void, such you shall pronounce and declare finally that they are, and ought to be held.

State Trials. 19 Hen. VIII. an. 1528. Divorce of Catharine of Arragon.

How be it a sodē surreptitious delyte, cast by the diuel into the sensual parte, is no sinne at all, but may be matter of merite.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1278.

He which otherwise dies, comes by surreption and stealth, and not warrantably unto his end.

Hales. Rem. A Ser. of Duels.

C. I told you, frailties and imperfections, and also sins of sudden surreption, and those that by daily incursion, continual import—unity, at some one time gained in upon us, (so they were as suddenly taken and repented of) were reconcilable with a regenerate state.

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 23.

Since that no labour was, nor any hand
Would offer to invade Vlysses house,
To take or touch with surreptitious
Or violent hand, what there was left for vse.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

In the strait progress to heaven, I call that an infallible sign of a great grace, and indeed the greatest degree of a great grace, when a man is prepared against sudden invasions of the spirit, surreptitious and extemporary assaults.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

It is with pleasure I hear that you have procured a correct copy of the Dunciad, which the many surreptitious ones have rendered so necessary.

Pope. The Dunciad, Let. to the Publishers.

I freely confess to you, that I was troubled and discouraged by having had the number of the first books that I writ, lessened by more than one, that were surreptitiously got away from me.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 37.

Besides, the author of the Letters was well known to all L. B.'s friends; the title-page of this surreptitious edition tells us, they were written by a person of quality.

Warburton. Lett. to the Edit. of Spirit of Patriotism.

SURROGATE, v. } Fr. Surroguer, and Sub- SURROGA'TION. } roguer. See SUBROGATE.

Surrogate is a common name for an officer in the ecclesiastical courts. The 128 Constit. is entitled "The Quality of Surrogates."

But this earthly Adam failing in his office, the heavenly was surrogated in his roome, who is able to save to the utmost.—More. Pref. General.

VOL. II.

This St. Peter gives as the reason why there should be a surrogation and new choice of an apostle to succeed into the room of Judas the traitor, viz. That he might be a witness with them of the resurrection.—Killingbeck, Ser. 120.

SUR-ROUND, v. Fr. Surrounder, q.d. super-rotundare. See ROUND.

To carry or bear round; to encircle, to encompass, to environ; to circumscribe.

So numberless were those bad angels seen Hovering on wing under the cope of hell
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

But cloud in stead, and ever-during-dark Surrounds me, from the chearful wayes of men Cut off.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Now each relay a sev'ral station findes,
Ere the triumphant train, the copps surrounds;
Relays of horse, long breath'd as winter windes,
And their deep cannon-mouth'd experienc'd hounds.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 2.

The course you steer I worthy blame conclude,
But 'tis because you leave it unpursu'd.
A monarch's crown with fate surrounded lies,
Who reach, lay hold on death that miss the prize.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

It is therefore very probable, that what Bourée took for land, was nothing but mountains of ice, surrounded by loose or field ice.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

SUR-SANURE. Fr. Sur, and sain, healing over.

Tyrwhitt calls it—a wound healing outwardly only.

And wel ye knowe that of a sursanure
In surgerie is perilous the cure.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 1166.

My wound abideth like a sursanure.
Id. The Floure of Courtesie.

SUR-TOUT. A robe or vesture worn over (sur) every thing else (tout).

That garment best the winter's rage defends,
Whose ample form without one plait depends;
By various names in various counties known,
Yet held in all the true surtout alone;
Be thine of kursey firm, though small the cost,
Then brave unwet the reign, unchill'd the frost.

Gay. Trivia, b. i.

SURVE'NE, v. Fr. Survenir. See To SUPER- VENE.

Hippocrates mentions a suppuration that survenes lethargies, which commonly terminates in a consumption.

Ye fathers and ye mothers eke also,
Though ye han children, be it on or mo,
Your is the charge of all hir surveance,
While that they ben under your governance.
Beth ware, that by ensample of your living,
Or by your negligence in chastising,
That they ne perish.—Chaucer. Doctoures Tale, v. 12,029.

Sturmius is he, out of whom the trew survey, and whole workmanship, is speciallie to be learned.

Ascham. The Scholemaster, b. ii.

The surveyors are diuers, one more principal: they survey the queenes lands within the dutchy.

Smith. Commonwealth, b. iii. c. 6.

And yet would I, no entrie make; but staid Alone without the heauen; and thence suruaid
From out a loftie watche toure raised there,
The countrie round about.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

— I will not use my sword
On thee or any, for a wench: unjustly though thou tak'st
The thing thou gav'st; but all things else, that in my ship thou mak'st
Greedy survey of, do not touch without my leave.

Id. Iliad, b. i.

You that are God's surveyors and can shew
How far and when, and why the wind doth blow;
Know all the charges of the dreadful thunder,
And when it will shoot over, or fall under.

F. Beaumont. The Honest Man's Fortune.

1873

Wherevpon shortlie after there were chosen by his advise seven ancient personages, men of good conscience and great experience, which were appointed to be surueors of the whole countrie.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Fergusius, an. 3640.

It is the most vile, foolish, absurd, palpable and ridiculous escutcheon, that ever this eye survis'd.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour.

It chaunced after upon a day,
The husbandman selfe to come that way,
Of custome for to surveue his grounde.

Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. February.

That turrets frame most admirable was,
Like highest heaven compassed around,
And lifted high above this earthly masse,
Which it surveued, as hills doen lower ground.

Id. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Like those who have survey'd the moon by glasses, can only tell of a new and shining world above us, but not relate the riches and glories of the place.

Dryden. The State of Innocence, Ded.

I thought that the first step towards satisfying several inquiries, the mind of man was very apt to run into, was to take a survey of our own understandings, examine our own powers, and see to what things they were adapted.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 1.

But the truth of this doctrine will further appear by the declaration and surveyal of those respects according to which Christ is represented the Saviour of men.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

After some survey of the state of the body, he is able to inform them.—Sanderson. Ser. p. 197.

Let observation with extensive view Survey mankind from China to Peru;
Remark each anxious toil, each eager strife,
And watch the busy scenes of crowded life.

SURVIVANCE. } Lat. Supervivere, (super, SURVIVER. } and vivere,) to live over SURVIVOR. } or beyond (sc.) any given SURVIVORSHIP. } period or event.

To over-live, to outlive; to live more than, more years than; years beyond; to exceed in duration or continuance of life.

The yeares of Nestor nothing were to his,
Ne yet Methusalem, though longest liv'd;
For he remembered both their infancie:
Ne wonder then if that he were depriv'd
Of native strength now that he them surviv'd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

For now no more of Oeneus sonnes surviv'd; they all were gone:

No more his royall selfe did live, no more his noble sonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

And lay e're while a holocaust,
From out her ashie womb now teem'd, Revives, reflowers, then vigorous most
When most unactive deem'd,
And though her bodie die, her fame survives,
A secular bird ages of lives.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

— The returne of my lou'd sire
Is past all hope; and should rude Fame inspire
From any place, a flattering messenger
With newes of his survivaill; he should beare
No least believe off, from my desperate loue.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

Sir Thomas More and our best chroniclers make it doubtful whether those two princes were so lost in king Richard's time, or no; and infer that one of them was thought to be living many years after his death: that might be enough to acquit him: which opinion I like the better, because it mentioneth the survivaunce but of one of them.

Sir G. Buck. Hist. of Rich. III. (1646.)

The people will remaine vncertaine, whil'st
'Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of either
Makes the survivor heyre of all.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 5.

The saint-like manner of this excellent person's passage from the world being as exemplary and conducing to the uses of survivors as the notice of his life.

Fell. Life of Hammond, p. 29.

Why this unmanly rage? recal to mind
Whom you forsake, what pledges leave behind.
Look if your hapless father yet survive;
Or if Ascanius, or Creusa, live.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. ii.

But be it so! that death shall bring thee peace,
That here thy sorrows and thy toils shall cease.
Death is what man should wish. But oh! what fate,
Shall on thy wife, thy sad survivor wait!

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

11 F

Christ's soul survived the death of his body: therefore shall the soul of every believer survive the body's death.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 20.

After a stay of more than two months at Concordia, their number was diminished nearly one half by sickness, in consequence of the fatigue and hardship which they had suffered by the shipwreck, and the survivors were sent in a small vessel to Europe.—Cook, First Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

From the same principle also arises the remaining grand incident of joint-estates; viz. the doctrine of survivorship: by which two or more persons are seised of a joint estate, of inheritance, for their own lives, or pur auter vie, or are jointly possessed of any chattel interest, the entire tenancy upon the decease of any of them remains to the survivors, and at length to the last survivor; and he shall be entitled to the whole estate, whatever it be, whether an inheritance or a common freehold only, or even a less estate.

Blackstone, Commentaries, b. ii. c. 12.

But as to any interesting speculations concerning its state of survivorship, 'tis plain they had none.

Warburton, Divine Legation, b. v. s. 6.

SUSCIPIENT, n. Fr. Susceptible; It. Suscettibile; Sp. Susceptible; Lat. Suscipere, to undertake, (sub, and capere.)

That can or may undertake; capable, able to take, or receive, or admit: emphatically, predisposed to admit or receive, (sc.) feelings or sensations; sensitive.

[Our late sovereign] taking him into his regard, taught him more and more to please himself, and moulded him (as it were) Platonically, to his own idea; delighting first in the choice of the materials, because he found him susceptible of good form.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 163.

The state and several motions and influences of the heavenly bodies is that providential law wherein they were created, and according to which they are governed; and the susceptibility of those influences, and the effects thereof, and of that motion, is the general providential law, whereby other physical beings are governed in relation thereunto.

Hale, Origin of Mankind, p. 35.

When the Jews being warned by the sermons of the Baptist repented of their sins, they confessed their sins to John in the susception of baptism.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. § 5.

And upon this account, namely, that man is not only an intellectual creature, but also hath liberty of will, he becomes a creature properly susceptive of a law, and capable of rewards and punishments.—Hale, Origin of Mankind, p. 367.

In our church those who are not secular persons, are not forbid to be godfathers, (as in the church of Rome) nor are any susceptors supposed to contract any affinity, as that such an undertaking should hinder marriage between the sponsors and the persons baptized, if otherwise it be lawful.

Fuller, Moderation of the Church of England, p. 281.

The next order of mercies is such which is of so pure and unmingled constitution, that it hath at first no regard to the capacities and dispositions of the receivers, and afterwards, when it hath, it relates only to such conditions, which it self creates and produces in the susceptient; I mean the mercies of the divine predestination.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

Let not the holy sacrament be administered to dying persons, when they have no use of reason to make that duty acceptable, and the mysteries effective to the purposes of the soul. For the sacraments and ceremonies of the gospel operate not without the concurrent actions and moral influence of the susceptient.—Id. Holy Dying, c. 5. § 5.

This is the time most susceptible of lasting impressions: and though those relating to the health of the body are by discreet people minded and fenced against, yet I am apt to doubt, that those which relate most peculiarly to the mind, and terminate in the understanding or passions, have been much less heeded than the thing deserves.

Locke, Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 33.

The willing susception and the cheerful sustenance of the cross, is indeed the express condition, and the peculiar character of our Christianity.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

Our best days do first pass away, was truly said; the nearer to its source our life is, the purer it is from stain, the freer from clogs, the more susceptive of good impressions, the more vivid and brisk in its activity.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 17.

It incenses the people (hugely susceptive of provocation) with a sense of notable injury done, and contempt cast upon it.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 29.

Nor can we have any idea of matter, which does not imply a natural discernibility and susceptivity of various shapes and modifications: i.e. mutability seems to be essential to it.—Wollaston, Religion of Nature, § 5.

[God] likewise effecting miracles superiour, or contrary to the law and course of nature, without any preparatory disposition: induced into the susceptient matter.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

These are the seminaries in which the clergy, who are to go out and instruct mankind, are formed, in the susceptible periods of their lives.—Knox, Liberal Education, § 46.

Furnished with a natural susceptibility, and free from any acquired impediment, the mind is then [in youth] in the most favourable state for the admission of instruction, and for learning how to live.—Id. Ess. 2.

SUSCITATE, v. Fr. Susciter; It. Suscitatore; Sp. Suscitar; Lat. Suscitare, (sursum citare, ciere,) to move upwards. To raise or rouse; to stir up.

He shall suscitate or rayse the courage of all men inclined to virtue.—Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. iii. c. 25.

Perhaps they [some veins of the earth] contain the seminal of spiders and scorpions, and such as in other earths by suscitation of the sun may arise unto animation.

Brown, Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

The temple is supposed to be dissolved; and, being so, to be raised again: therefore the suscitation must answer to the dissolution.—Pearson, On the Creed, Art. 5.

SUSPECT, v. Fr. Suspecte; It. Sospettare; Sp. Suspecto; Lat. Suspectum, past part. of sus-picere, to look under, (sub, and specere,) to look into.

But it is a very suspectable business that he means no more then empty space by it

More, Defence of the Moral Cabbala, App.

Thus much concerning the first sort of obedience which is absolutely perfect; it is not attainable by Christians in this life, and therefore the want of it should not deject us with a suspiciency of the want of grace.—Hopkins, Ser. 14.

There is no better way to moderate suspicions, than to account upon such suspicions as true, and yet to bridle them, as false, for so farre, a man ought to make use of suspicions, as to provide, as if that should be true, that he suspects, yet it may doe him no hurt.

Bacon, Ess. Of Suspicion.

There was not a more suspicious man, nor a more stout; and in such a composition, they doe small hurt.—Id. Ib.

These articles are managed too suspiciously.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 21.

Thou know'st my son, how Joves revengeful wife, By force and fraud, attempts thy brother's life. And often hast thou mourn'd with me his pains; Him Dido now with blandishment detains. But I suspect the town where Juno reigns.

Dryden, Virgil, Æneis, b. i.

This makes it still more strongly suspectable, that it was really a design or policy of the devil, by imitating the miracles of our Saviour Christ, both in Appollonius and Vespasian, to counter-work God Almighty in the plot of Christianity, and to keep up or conserve his own usurped tyranny in the Pagan world still.

Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 269.

But to prevent suspicion, will I steep
His temples in the dews of balmy sleep,
Then to Cythera's sacred seats remove,
Or softly lay him in th' Italian grove.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Through this a cave was dug with vast expense:
The work it seem'd of some suspicious prince,
Who when abusing power with lawless might,
From public justice would secure his flight.

Dryden. Sigismunda & Guiscardo.

To be abhorred, or even suspected and distrusted, by those amongst whom we live, is hardly supportable: to be merely disliked and disapproved is very mortifying.

Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

Suspicion may be excited by some kind of accusation, not supported by evidence sufficient for conviction, but sufficient to trouble the repose of confidence.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 3.

It is never advisable to go the utmost lengths of what may, strictly speaking, be just lawful; they adjoin so very closely on what is forbidden: yet there is a contrary extreme, an immoderate suspiciousness of innocent compliances.

Secker, vol. i. Ser. 27.

SUSPEND, v.

SUSPENDER.

SUSPENDING, n.

SUSPENSE, adj.

use of ye wyttes, & no cōtrary wilful doing agāist ye wit.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 595.

I [Wolsey] therefore require you according to the special trust and confidence that the king's highness and I have in you [Gardiner], now for ever to acquit yourselves herein with all effect possible, accordingly so as the king's highness be not longer kept in this perplexity and suspence.

Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. ii. No. 22.

Make them affrayde of euery thyng and namely to touch mine annoynted, and make them to feare the sentence of the church, suspentiōs, excommunications and curses.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 134.

I know some great scholars there are, which still suspend their judgment, and make it a doubt, as ever things of such antiquity will be.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10. Illustrations.

But I shall meet with thee at length, and bring thy latest houre,

If with like fauour any God, be fautor of my powre: Meane while, some other shall repay what I suspend in thee.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

I may adde thereunto,—Or the cautelousnes of suspenders and not forward concluders in these times.

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. ii. c. 5.

But Scudamour, whose hart twixt doubtfull feare
And feeble hope hung all this while suspence

Desiring of his Amoret to heare
Some gladfull newes and sure intelligence,
Her thus bespake.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

And the great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race though steep, suspens in heav'n Held by thy voice.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

— At each behind

A seraph stood, and in his hand a reed
Stood waving tipt with fire; while we suspense, Collected stood within our thoughts amus'd.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

For by this meane it came to passe, that one church could not but accuse and condemne another of disobedience to the will of Christ, in those things where manifest difference was betweene them: whereas the selfe-same orders allowed, but yet established in more warie and suspence manner, as being to stand in force till God should giue the opportunity of some generall conference what might bee best for euery of them afterwards to doe: this, I say, had both preuented all occasion of iust dislike which others might take, and reserued a greater libertie vnto the authors themselves of entring into farther consultation afterwards.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, Pref.

Judges walk suspensly, and are indifferent to either party, and whatsoever the intent be, yet they make no overture of it till time of sentence come.

Hales. Remaines. Letter from the Synod of Dort, an. 1619.

Mess. Ah Manoa I refrain, too suddenly
To utter what will come at last too soon;

Lest evil tidings with too rude irruption
Kitting thy aged ear should pierce too deep.

Man. Suspense in news is torture, speak them out.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, v. 1577.

In the meane while it may be, that suspence of iudgement and exercise of charitie were safer and seemlier for Christian men, then the hote pursuite of these controuersies.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv. § 14.

Suspensions may stop, and degradations cut off the vse or exercise of power before giuen: but voluntarily it is not in the power of man to separate and pull asunder what God by his authoritie coupleth.—Id. Ib. b. v. § 77.

Psyche, snatch'd from danger's desperate jaws
Into the arms of this illustrious lover,

The truth of her condition hardly knows,
But in suspensive thought awhile doth hover.

pump, is not in its natural place, as that is which is stagnant in the well.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 167.

How is that fixed, or certain, which is yet floating and hanging in suspense, either may or may not be?

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 82.

During this suspension of any desire, before the will be determined to action, and the action (which follows that determination) done, we have an opportunity to examine, view, and judge of the good or evil of what we are going to do.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

To such beasts as feed upon grass and other herbs, and therefore are forced to hold their eyes long in a hanging posture, and to look downwards for the choosing and gathering of their food, the seventh or suspensory muscle is very useful, to enable them to do so without much pain or weariness.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

This moves sober pens unto suspensory and timorous assertions.—Brown. Christian Morals, b. ii. c. 4.

While a great event is in suspense, the action warms, and the very suspense, made up of hope and fear, maintains no unpleasing agitation in the mind.

Bolingbroke. On the Spirit of Patriotism.

Since the proper business of the day thus engages every rank, every sex, and every age, it is evident that it requires a suspension of the ordinary business of the world.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

SWAG, v. } Perhaps from the A. S. Wæg-an,
SWA'GGY. } to weigh, (qv.) and see SPEND.
 To weigh down; to sink or depress by weight or heaviness. See SWAY.

Because so laid, they [brick or squared stones] are more apt in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and so to crevice the wall.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 20.

Your Dane, your Germaine, and your swag-belly'd Hollander, [drinke ho] are nothing to your English.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3.

The proper Latine word is Fiber and Castor, but borrowed from the Greek, so called quasi, γαστρός; that is, animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 4.

A ruffian is the same with a swaggerer, so called because endeavouring to make that side to swag or weigh down, whereon he ingageth. The same also with swash-buckler,
 from swashing, or making a noise on bucklers.

 would blesse you to heare what he said. No, Ile no swag- gers.—Shakespeare. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

The butcher is stout, and he values no swagger.
Swift. Will Wood's Petition to the People of England, (1725.)
 It was Atheism openly swaggering, under the glorious appearance of wisdom and philosophy.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 61.

After all the swaggering and confidence of disputers, there will be uncertainty in lesser matters: and when we travel in uncertain roads, 'tis safest to choose the middle.
Glanvill. Ser. 2.

He chuck'd again, when other coins he found,
 And scarcely deign'd to set a foot on ground,
 But swagger'd like a lord about his hall.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The swallow, murderer of the bees small,
 That maken honie of floures fresh of hew.
Chaucer. The Assembly of Fowles.

Of all birds, the swallow flieth bias, and windeth in and out in his flight: hee is most swift of wing, and flieth with ease: and therefore not so readie to be surpris'd and taken by other birds; he never feedeth but flying, and so doth no other bird besides.—Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 24.

Who but the swallow triumphs now alone?
 The canopy of heaven is all her own:
 Her youthful offsprings to their haunts repair,
 And glide along in glades, and skim in air,
 And dip for insects in the purling springs,
 And stoop on rivers to refresh their wings.

they were effected.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 14.

It is indeed very difficult to conceive how any thing which was not deposited here at its creation, or brought hither by the diligence of man, could find its way to a place so severed from the rest of the world, by seas of immense extent, except the hypothesis that has been mentioned on another occasion be adopted, and this rock be supposed to have been behind, when a large tract of country, of which it was part, subsided by some convulsion of nature, and was swallowed up in the ocean.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 14.

But the health of the mind, as of the body, depends more given us our word. "Swamp, a swampy place, locus spungiosus seu fungosus." It may not improbably have originated in the verb to swim,—a place swimmed, swammed, or swamt; i. e. floated or overflown with water.

A swamp,—any place saturated with water; a quaggy, boggy place; a bog.

To swamp, (a very common word,) to sink, submerge, swallow, (met. as in swampy ground.)

This is a very sickly place, and I believe hath need enough of an hospital; for it is seated so nigh the creeks and swamps, that it is never free from a noisom smell.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

The twelfth in the morning we crossed a deep river, passing over it on a tree, and marched 7 mile in a low swampy ground.—Id. Id. an. 1681.

To their great disappointment found it a swamp, covered with low bushes of birch, about three feet high, interwoven with each other, and so stubborn that they could not be bent out of the way; it was therefore necessary to lift the leg over them, which at every step was buried, ancle deep, in the soil.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 4.

Thus kings were first invented, thus kings
Were burnish'd into heroes, and became
The arbiters of this terraqueous swamp;

Full summer forth should bring.
Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 1.

Thus the idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is white colour, long neck, red beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 23.

[Thy name, O Varrus] the wings of swans, and stronger
pinion'd rhyme,
Shall raise aloft, and soaring bear above
Th' immortal gift of gratitude to Jove.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 9.

It is also said that if swans be lawfully marked it is felony to steal them, though at large in a public river; and that it is likewise felony to steal them, though unmarked, if in any private river or pond; otherwise it is only a trespass.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 17.

SWASH, v. } Junius and Skinner suggest—SWASH, n. } is formed from the sound. A SWA'SHER. } great swash of water, the latter SWA'SHING, n. } says, is a large torrent of water falling with much violence. It may be,—a wash, or collection of waters. Tyndall applies swash to such kind of liquids as it is not uncommon to call wash: hog's wash. Holinshed calls a poor drink of honicombs and water—swish-swash. To swash may then be, consequentially,—

To dash; to make a confused noise; to dash or strike (upon bucklers). A swash-buckler,—one who makes a noise by dashing on his buckler; bragging, and bullying about.

Swasher,—a bragger, a bully.

His stomacke abhorreth longyn after slobber, sause and swashe, at which a whole stomacke is readye to cast hys

Whereby a man maie see how manie bloudie quarels a bralling swash-buckler maie picke out of a bottle of haie, namelie when his braines are forebitten with a bottle of nappie ale.—Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1529.

A ruffian is the same with a swaggerer, so called, because endeavouring to make that side to swag or weigh down, whereon he ingageth. The same also with swash-buckler,
from swashing or making a noise on bucklers.

SWATHE, v. } See SWADDLE. A. S. Sweth-
SWATHE, n. } ian, be-swethan, to bind.

To bind; to surround; to tie up in bands or fillets.

A swathe,—a band or bandage; also written swarth, and applied to the rows of reaped or cut corn.

One spreadeth those bands, so in order to lie,

As barley (in swatches) may fill it thereby.

Tusser. August's Husbandry.

When they will, they may lay down the young infants, and at their pleasure take them out of their swathing cloaths, and hold them to the fire, and refresh them with play.

Sir T. More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 5.

And for the shire whose surface seems most brute,

Derby, an eagle sitting on a root,

A swathed infant holding in her foot.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

— Whose burden'd pasture bears

The most abundant swathe, whose glebe such goodly ears,
As to the weighty sheif with scythe or sickle cut,
When as his harden'd hand the labourer comes to put,
Sinks him in his own sweat, which it but hardly welds.

Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 14.

And thee (O archer Phœbus) with waues cleere

Washt sweetly ouer, swadled with sincere

And spotlesse swath-bands; and made then to flow

About thy breast, a mantle, white as snow.

Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Apollo.

Upon his head he wears a cap, not brought to a conick form, not including the entire head; but still including more than the half of it. It is named Masnaemphthes:
but its make is such, that it seems to be a crown: it is made of thick swaths, but the contexture is of linnen.

Whiston. Josephus. Antiquities of the Jews, b. iii. c. 7.

From their infancy their feet are kept swathed up with bands, as hard as they can possibly endure them.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

They immediately began to swaddle me up in my nightgown with long pieces of linnen, which they folded about me till they had wrapt me up in above an hundred yards of swathe.—Spectator, No. 90.

Here stretch'd in ranks, the leuell'd swarths are found,

Sheaves heap'd on sheaves here thicken up the ground.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

He [God] swathes about the swelling of the deep,

That shines and rests, as infants smile and sleep;

Vast as it is, it answers as it flows

The breathings of the lightest air that blows.

Cowper. Retirement.

SWAY, v. } Skinner thinks,—to sway, re-SWAY, n. } gere, imperare, gubernare, is from SWA'YFUL. } the Ger. Schweben, to move. It is, probably, the verb to weigh. See SWAG.

To poise, to balance; to poise, to hold or keep in equipoise; to wield, to weigh down, to incline, to influence; to guide, to rule.

Oft must menne on the oke smite, till the happie dente haue entred, whiche with the okes owne swaie, maketh it to come all at ones.—Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

And golden Marcus he, that swaide the Romaine sword,

Bare witness of Boemia, by credite of his word.

Gascoigne. In Praise of a Gentlewoman, &c.

That glauncing fire out of the yron plaid;

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Which such disgrace unto the queen appears

That (all incens'd with an ambitious rage)

She doth conspire to have him made away,

As one that stay'd the current of her way.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Like Noyes great flood, with their importune sway,

This land invaded with like violence,

And did themselves through all the north display.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Then cherishing th' exhibitors against vs.

Id. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 1.

Our practice is guided by notions that we had sucked in,
is swayed by inclinations that we got before.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

With me repair, no vulgar prize,

Where the fam'd tower of Neleus rise,

Where Cytherea's wayful power

Is worshipp'd in the reedy bower.

Fawkes, Idyll 28. The Distaff.

Our latent motives, which bear so great a sway in the behaviour of most men, cannot owe their appearance to the mind, because they escape her observation when she would discover them.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 20.

I recommend it to every man, to remark how they [motives] introduce or mutually affect each other, how they fluctuate, their seasons of vigour and faintness; to distinguish what motive actually swayed with him on every particular occasion.—Id. Ib. vol. i. pt. i. c. 5.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 3.

If any [saith he] swear by the heaven, or by the earth, or by the sun, or the like, although the mind of the swearer be, under those words, to swear by him that created them, yet this is not an oath.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 16.

I doubt not but that it is much more easy to make most swearers proselytes than converts, and a task of less difficulty to convince their judgments, than to reform their practice.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 3.

Customary and unnecessary swearing is so confessedly unlawful that they are ashamed to defend it that blush not to practice it; and even they renounce it in their opinions, that most cherish it in their discourse.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 3.

Somewhat allied to this [blasphemy], although in an inferior degree, is the offence of profane and customary swearing and cursing.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 4.

The swearer continues to swear: tell him of his wickedness he allows it is great, but he continues to swear on.

How would the sons of Troy, in arms renown'd,
And Troy's proud dames, whose garments sweep the ground,

Attaint the lustre of my former name,
Should Hector basely quit the field of fame.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three sullying trades avoid with equal care;
The little chimney sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng.

Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

But now should this our broom-stick pretend to enter the scene, proud of its birchen spoils it never bore, and all covered with dust, though the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should be apt to ridicule and despise its vanity.

Swift. A Meditation upon a Broom-stick.

Th' expanded waters gather on the plain,
They float the fields, and overtop the grain:
Then rushing onwards, with a sweepy way,
Bear flocks, and folds, and labouring hinds away.

SWEET, adj. } Anciently written Sote, SWEET, n. } soote. (See Soot.) Wiclif writes—sutely, and also swete; SWEETEN, v. } Dut. Soet, suët; Ger. Suss; SWEETENER. } Sw. Soot; A. S. Swæt, suavis, SWEETING, n. } dulcis. Skinner thinks we have our word from the Lat. SWEETISH. } Suavis; they may have had SWEETISHNESS. } a common origin. SWEETLY. } SWEETNESS. }

Sweet, (lit.)—is more especially applied to the taste and smell: e. g. the taste of honey, and the smell of the violet:—then extended to the hearing, the sight.

Sweet, as applied,—1. To the taste, is opposed to—sour or bitter. 2. To the smell, to—what we call stinking; or smelling fetidly, foully.

It is thus used, as equivalent to—

Fragrant; melodious or mellifluous; generally,—

Pleasing, agreeable, delicious or delightful; grateful; assuaging; mollifying, soothing.

As applied to the taste, we have no equivalent, except the old word dulce, from the Lat. Dulcis.

To sweeten, or make sweet, is also to remove sourness or bitterness, acidity or acerbity; and also—any thing ungrateful or displeasing.

Berkeley. Farther Thoughts on Tar Water.

As there is music uninform'd by art
In those wild notes, which with a merry heart
The birds in unfrequented shades express,
Who, better taught at home, yet please us less:
So in your verse a native sweetness dwells,
Which shames composure, and its art excels.

Dryden, Epist. 1. To Sir R. Howard.

The things of this world, while we continue in it, must be sought after in a certain degree; and the innocent amusements of it are kindly allowed us to sweeten our toil.

Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 23.

Let us look up to it [the happiness of a future state] as the end of all our labour—the sweetener of all our toils—our comfort in every affliction—and our great defence against the fear of sickness, old age, and death.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 21.

His chaunged powres at first themselves not felt;
Till crudled cold his corage gan assayle,
And chearefull blood in fayntness chill did melt,
Which like a fever fit, through all his bodie swelt.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

With huge impatience he inly swelt,
More for great sorrow that he could not pas
Then for the burning torment which he felt.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 11.

For other none such passion can contrive
In perfect forme, as this good lady felt,
When she so faire a daughter saw survive,
As Pastorella was; that nigh she swelt
For passing ioy, which did all into pittie melt.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 12.

The drier aer is generally the most salutary and healthy, so it be not too sweltery and infested with heat or fuliginous vapours, which is by no means a friend to health and longevity.—Evelyn, Fumifugium.

Some [country] would always have long nights and short days, others again perpetually long days and short nights:
one climate would be scorched and sweller'd with everlasting dog-days; while an eternal December blasted another.—Bentley, Ser. 8.

The rugged Alps must those bare feet assail,
Froz'n on the hill, or swelt'ring in the vale.
Cambridge, The Scribleriad, b. v.

SWERD. See SWARD.

SWERVE, v. } Dut. Sweruen, errare, deer-
SWE'RVING, n. } rare, vagari, fluitare, fluctuare, (Kilian.) Sw. Swarf-wa, circumagere, (Ihre.)
It is, probably, the A. S. Hweorf-ian, (to warp,) which Somner thus widely interprets,—vertere, convertere, redire, mutare, errare, fluctuare, librare,—to turn, to convert, to return, to change, to wander, to float about, to hover or fly about.
It may be more strictly explained:—

To roam or ramble; to wander; to go from the straight path, out of a straight line; to deviate, to incline, to bend; to give way; to move on an inclined or bending line; or any thing that bends, yields, or gives way.

For in good feith to tellen soth,
I trowe, though I shulde sterue,
She wolde not hir eie swerue,
My herte with one goodly looke
To fede.
Gower, Con. A. b. vi.

But the sword more merciful than he to himself, with the slipping of the pommel, the point swerved, and razed him but upon the side.—Sidney, Arcadia, b. iii.

But marke, good Christian reader, how farre he swarueth from that he hath taken in hande. I demaunde of the open churche: he answeareth mee of priuate houses.
Jewell, A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 59.

Which fredome I have by thy guilt,
And not by my deseruing,
Since so vneconstantly thou wilt
Not loue, but still be sweruing.
Vncertaine Auctors, The Louer accusing his Loue, &c.

But howsoever these swaruings are now and then incident into the course of nature, neuertheless so constantly the lawes of nature are by naturall agents obserued, that no man denyeth but those things which nature worketh, are wrought either alwayes or for the most part after one and the same manner.—Hooker, Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 3.

Upon her arme a silver anchor lay,
Whereon she leane ever, as befell;
And ever up to heven, as she did pray,
Her steadfast eyes were bent, ne swarved other way.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

So all attonce they on the prince did thonder;
Who from his saddle swarved nought asyde.
Ne to their force gave way, that was great wonder;
But like a bulwarke firmly did abyde.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 10.

And now their mightiest quell'd, the battel swerv'd,
With many an inroad gor'd; deformed rout
Enter'd, and foul disorder.—Milton, Paradise Lost, b. vi.

His loyalte he kept, his love, his zeale;
Nor number, nor example with him wrought
To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind Though single.
Id. Ib. b. v.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch (the tree was high):
Yet nimbly up from bough to bough I swerv'd,
And for to-morrow have ten more reserv'd.
Dryden, Theocritus, Idyll 3.

Our affections and passions put frequently a bias so secret, and yet so strong, on our judgments, as to make them swerve from the direction of right reason.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 2. Human Reason, § 9.

But were we to give a full latitude to sympathy we should whistle about with every wind, nor could ever keep steady to one tenour of conduct, because we should perpetually meet with somebody or other leading us by their example to swerve from it.

Search, Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 19.

SWE'VEN, n. } A. S. Swefn-ian, sopire, dor-SWE'VEN, v. } mire, somniare, to lull, to rest or sleep, to be asleep, to dream. Junius (says Lye) thinks the Goth. verb Sweifan, cessare, may be the original word. See Junius' Goth. Glossary, in v. Swaitth.

On a Thursday at nyght at euen he gede to reste,
To hunt ther he had ticht in his new foreste.
On slepe sone he felle, the sweuen bifor him ran,
Him thouht in his chapelle he was withouten man,

eldris schulen dreme sweuenys.—Wiclif, Dedis, c. 2.

And Pandarus, with a full good entent,
Laied him to slepe, and saied, "If ye be wise, Sweueneth not now, lest more folke arise."
Chaucer, Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

How dorsten ye for shame say to your love,
That any thing might maken you aferde?
Han ye no mannes herte, and han a berde?
Alas! and con ye ben agast of sweuenis?
Nothing but vanitee, God wote, is sweuenis.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,924.

SWICHE. i.e. such. See SWILKE.

For unto swiche a worthy man as he Accordeth nought, as by his faculte,
To haven with sike lazars acquaintance.
Chaucer, Proh. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 243.

Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,
And in adversite ful patient:
And swiche he was ypreved often sithes.—Id. Ib. v. 485.

SWIFT, adj. } A. S. Swift, celer, alacer.
SWIFT, n. } Skinner thinks,—from the Ger.
SWIFTLY. } Schweben, movere, motitare.
SWIFTNESS. } Ihre thinks the Sw. Swafwa, motitare, to move often, may have some connexion with the Eng. Swift, which we apply to frequent motion, (sc.) of a bird's wings in flight, of feet in running, (see the quotation from Locke;) and hence—

Quick, rapid, speedy; moving with velocity or fleetness, with celerity, with alacrity or eagerness; fleet, nimble, eager, prompt.

"Knygtes," he seyde, "wat wolle ge thencheth chese?
"Ne see ge, that her hors beth suystore than goure be?
That ge beth dede anon, gyf ge wolleth fle?"
R. Gloucester, p. 397.

A suyst stede ther was a lady thider sent.
R. Brunne, p. 219.

Edward knowe his pas, the last of alle him hent,
Asaied him vp & doun, suystest he was of alle.—Id. Ib.

The larke that is a lasse fowel, is loveloker of lydene [leden]
And swetter of savour, and suyster of wynges.
Piers Plouhman, v. 239.

The mouth of whiche is ful of cursyng and bittyrnesse,
the feet of hem ben swifte to schede blood.
Wiclif, Romayns, c. 3.

Whose mouthes are full of curssynge and bytternes.
Their fete are swifte to sheede bloude.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And whanne he hadde smyte the side of Petir, he-reiside felden doun fro hise hondis.—Wiclif, Dedis, c. 12.

For present time abideth nought,
It is more swift than any thought;
So little while it doth endure
That there nis compte ne measure.
Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose.

The fame with hir swifte wynges
About fleeth, and bare tidynge,
And make it couth in all londes,
How that Horestes, with his hondes
Clytemnestrie his owne mother slough.
Gower, Con. A. b. iii.

Ne care ne feare I how the wind do blow,
Or whether swift I wend or whether slow.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

She cannot be so much without true iudgement,
Hauing so swift and excellent a wit
As she is prisde to haue, as to refuse
So rare a gentleman as signior Benedicke.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iii. sc. 1.

He can live in the strongest swifts of the water.
Walton. Angler.

Whom when his other fellows saw, they fled
As fast as feete could carry them away;
And after them the prince as swiftly sped,
To be aveng'd of their unknighly play.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

Nathlesse the villen sped himselfe so well,
Whether through swiftnesse of his speedie beast,
Or knowledge of those woods where he did dwell,
That shortly he from daunger was releast.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 5.

Juba writeth moreover, that there be certaine people of the Troglodites, named Therothoes, for their hunting of wild beasts, of their exceeding and wonderful swiftnesse in chasing of deere upon land.—Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 29.

Where now the valley greene, and mountaine bare,
The riuer, Forrest, wood, and crystall springs,
The hauke, the hound, the hinde, the swift-foot hare,
The lutes sweet straine, the voice, that sweetly sings,
And princely sports in courts of mightie kings?
Mirroure for Magistrates, p. 655.

Those of his swiftly mounted Greekes that in their armes were fit,
Those he put on with cheareful words, and bad them not remit
The least sparke of their forward spirits.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Whose death when swift-wing'd Fame at full convey'd
To this disturbed queen, misdoubting nought;
Despite and sorrow such affliction laid Upon her soul, as wondrous passions wrought.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Herald, be swift, and bid Machaon bring His speedy succour to the Spartan king
Pierc'd with a winged shaft, (the deed of Troy)
The Grecian's sorrow, and the Dardan's joy.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Suppose them [the fix'd stars] whirled about the earth with that stupendous swiftnesse that the Ptolemeans and Tychonians attribute to them.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 134.

The swiftnesse of motion is measured by distance of place and length of time wherein it is performed.
Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 1.

A forward hare, of swiftnesse vain,
The genius of the neighb'ring plain,
Wou'd oft deride the drudging crowd:
For geniuses are ever proud.

Lloyd. The Hare & Tortoise, (1757.)

The swift actually performs what has been in these enlightened times disproved of the former; [bird of Paradise] except the small time it takes in sleeping, and what it devotes to incubation, every other action is done on the wing.
Pennant. British Zoology. Swift Swallow.

SWIG, v. To swig is, perhaps, to swag or sway, to weigh or drag down; to make a heavy draught.

The flock is drain'd, the lambkins swig the teat,
But find no moisture, and then idly bleat.
Creech. Virgil, Ecl. 3.

SWILL, v. } A. S. Swelgan, swilgan, to swal-SWILL, n. } low or swill.
To swill (usually applied to large draughts),— to swallow largely; to drink, to drench, to wash, to soak.

Swill or swilling,—the large quantities of liquid food given to swine are so called.

He geueth vs leaue according to our demerites to be fedde
wyth the swyll and draffe of masyng masses, &c.
Winchester. On True Obedience, To the Reader.

They haue dronk vp my swilling tub.
Skellon. Elinour Rumming.

The wretched, bloody, and vsurping boare,
(That spoyld your summer fields, and fruitfull vines)
Swilles your warm blood like wash, & makes his trough
In your embowel'd bowomes.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act v. sc. 2.

— I should be loath
To meet the rudeness, and swill'd insolence
Of such late wassailers.
Milton. Comus.

Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary the devil, like a roaring lion, goes about seeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. v. 8. Of so peculiar a force is temperance against the fiery assaults of the devil, and so unfit a match is a soaking, swilling swine to encounter this roaring lion.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

Thus as they swim in mutual swill, the talk,
Vociferous at once with twenty tongues,
Reels fast from theme to theme.—Thomson. Autumn.

When at the fountain's head, as merit ought
To claim the place, you take a swilling draught,
How easy 'tis an envious eye to throw,
And tax the sheep from troubling streams below.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The most common of these causes are an hereditary disposition; swilling down great quantities of cold watery liquors, which are not voided, &c.—Arbuthnot. Of Diet, c. 4.

Wiclif. Dedis, c. 27.

And commaunded that they that could swyme should cast
the selues fyrste into the sea, and scape to lade.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

When amitie first in our brests begonne,
Which shall endure as long as any sunne
May shine on earth, or water swimme in seas.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

There thou maist love, and dearly loved be,
And swim in pleasure, which thou here dost mis;
There must thou best be seene, and best maist see:
The wood is fit for beasts, the court is fitt for thee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

It is good for the swimming and dizziness of the braine.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 30.

Both the swim and the trip are properly mine; every body will affirm it that has any judgement in dancing, I assure you.—B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels.

— Me thinks, the minde in me
Doth turne as fast; as (in a flood, or sea)
A raging whirlepit doth; to gather in
To fishy death, those swimmers in their sin.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

Like an ill swimmer, I have willingly staid long in my own depth; and though I am eager of performing more, yet am loath to venture out beyond my knowledge.
Dryden. The Rival Aides, Ep. Ded.

I am taken with a grievous swimming in my head, and such a mist before mine eyes, that I can neither hear nor see.—Id.

This they explained by a closed vessel filled with sea water, which swimming awhile upon the ocean, does, on the vessel's breaking, flow in again, and mingle with the common mass.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

Very well, says he with a smile, having instantly resumed his human benign countenance, now we have broken the ice we shall go on swimmingly; I did not intend to hurt you.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

SWINDLE, v. } The Ger. Schwindel is—SWINDLE, n. } vertigo; and Wachter thinks SWINDLER. } it derived either from winden, vertere, to wind, or schwinden, deficere, to swoon or swoond. Schwinden, he adds, is used—de qua-cunque diminutione.

They are very modern words; and now in very common use; but their time and manner of introduction require to be ascertained.

Distress and difficulty excite meanness and artifice; fraud and injustice soon follow, and the dignity of the British merchant is sunk in the scandalous appellation of a swindler.
Knox. Ess. No. 8.

SWINE, n. } A. S. Sugu; Dut. Seughe, soegh,

SWINISHLY. } Sugga, a sow;—Goth. Swain; A. S. Swin; Dut. Swyn, a swine. Wachter is inclined to derive the former set from Ger. Seug-en, lactare, i. e. from Ger. Saug-en; Dut. Sugen;
Sw. Sug-a; A. S. Suc-can, to suck. The latter (with Junius) from the Gr. Συγος, suillus.

A. S. Kine is the plural we have adopted for Coven; analogy seems to point to Sow-en as the origin of swine, by dropping the o in pronunciation.

And not fer fro hem was a flock of many swyn lesewyng. — Wiclif. Matt. c. 8.

And there was a good waye of from the a great heerd of swine fedinge.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This messenger drank sadly ale and wine,
And stolen were his lettres prively
Out of his box, while he slept as a swine.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5163.

For so muche as thou haste not esteemed it according to the worthinesse therof, nor yet bene thankfull vnto God for such an heauenly gift, but rather swynishly troden it vnder thy feete, and curiously persecuted his faithfull seruantes for it.—Bale. Image, pt. i. fol. 40.

Swine having lost one eye, are not thought to live long after; otherwise they may continue untill they be fifteen yeers old, yea and some to twentie.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 51.

Will ye know that a swine is sicke or unsound, pluck a bristle from the back, and it will be bloodie at the root: also he will carrie his neck at one side as he goeth.—Id. Ib.

Or if in pleasure? live we as we may,
Let swinish grill delight in dunghill clay.
Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 2.

Plutarch reports concerning swine, that their optick nerves are so disposed to turn their eyes downward, that they cannot look upwards, nor behold the face of heaven, unless they be thrown upon their backs.

Such swine are we: we seldom can look up to heaven till God by his judgments throws us upon our backs; till he humbles us and softens us with showers of our own blood, and tears of sorrow: and yet God hath not promised that he will do so much for us; but for ought we know, as soon as ever the devil enters into our swinish and brutish hearts, we shall run down the hill, and perish in the floods and seas of intolerable misery.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 13.

The end being, as you see, to reuoke the king from worse to better, from the swines-stie of vice to the statelie throne of vertue.—Holinshed. Chronicles. Hen. II. an. 1172.

— This discourse they held
In mutual kinde; when from a neighbour field,
His swine and swine-herds came; who in their coats
Inclos'd their herds for sleepe.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

A swineheard meeting him by chance
And pitying his estate,
Implay'd the western king, vnkowne,
On his affaires to wait.
Nor did the needie king disdaine
Such roome, for such reliefe:
An vnder swineheardship did serue,
He sought not to be chiefe.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

SWING, v. } A. S. Sweng-an; Dut. Swing-
SWING, n. } hen; Ger. Schwenghen; Sw.
SWINGER. } Swing. Somner explains,—to shake, to toss, to brandish, to move or stirre, to jogge. Swing is usually applied to—

A motion backwards and forwards, similar to that of a pendulum, held at one end, and making with the other a segment of a circle; or to—a motion rotatory—of any thing thrown or whirled round the whole circle: a vibratory, a rotatory—motion.

Swing, the noun, is (met.)—the full length or extent, the full sweep, the full throw; full, unchecked course or progress.

In the other [wallet] he layeth vp all his owne & swyngeth

— And Ate that had wrought
This anger by Saturnia, by her bright-haire he caught, Held downe her head, and over her made this infallible vow:

That never to the cope of starres should reascend that brow,
Being so infortunate to all. Thus swinging her about,
He cast her from the fierie heaven, who ever since thrust out

His forked sting in th' affaires of men.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xix.

— And so the victors palme

Some set up swings in the streets, and get money of those who will swing in them.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

A man has perhaps for a long time took the full swing of his voluptuous humour, wallowed in all the pleasures of sensuality.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

These [familiar romps] Mr. Spectator, are the swingers:
you are to know these careless pretty creatures are very innocents again; and it is to be no matter what they do, for 'tis all harmless freedom. They get on ropes, as you must have seen the children, and are swung by their men visitants.—Spectator, No. 492.

The boy who wished to be a king that he might have an officer appointed to swing him all day long upon a gate, took his resolution upon the remembrance of what had given him pleasure.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 22.

They say that a goddess, having a lump or mass of earth

SWIRE. A. S. Swer, sweor, columna: also collum, cervix, the neck.

Nor she had nothing slowe be
For to scratchen all her face
And for to rent in many place
Her clothes, and for to teare her swire,
As she that was filled of yre.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

SWITCH, n. } The Sw. Sweg, Ger. Zweig, SWITCH, v. } is the A. S. Dut. and English Twig, twiga, twygh, twig; any thing twicked or twitched; as a slip from a larger branch, or bough: and switch is—

A slip or strip; a thin, slender shoot; a thin, pliant stick.

When to these, the race growes; then as right Drive on them as thy eye can iudge; then lay thy bridles
weight
Most of thy left side: thy right horse, then switching; all thy throate
(Spent in encouragements) giue him; and all the reine let flote
About his shoulders.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

A cloud of pitch, a spurre, and a switch,
To haste him away, and a whirle-wind play.
B. Jonson. Witches' Charms.

Fetch me a dozen crab-tree stauces, and strong ones; these are but switches to 'em.—Shakes. Hen. VIII. Act v. sc. 3.

At spur or switch no more he skipt,
Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

Dear Sid, then, why wert thou so mad
To break thy rod like naughty lad!
You should have kiss'd it in your distress,
And then return'd it to your mistress;
Or made it a Newmarket switch,
And not a rod for thy own breech.
Swift. The Virtues of Sid Hamet the Magician's Rod, (1718.)

SWITHE. A. S. Swith, valde, nimis; from swith-ian, valere, prevalere, præstare,—to prevail.

Applied to time,—
Instantly, quickly, speedily, promptly.

Gogmagog was a geand swithe grete and strong.
A boutte four & twenti fet me seith he was long.
R. Gloucester, p. 22.

Whan he wist ther wille, he bled hider swythe,
Thei resceyued him fulle faire, & were of him blythe.
R. Brunne, p. 45.

Go out swithe into the grete stretis and smale stretis of the citee: and bringe yn hider pore men and feble. blynde and crokid.—Wiclif. Luk. c. 14.

And Jhesus seith to him, that thing that thou doist, do thou swithe.—Id. Jon. c. 13.

This messenger, to don his avantage,
Unto the kinges mother rideth swithe,
And saluteth hire ful faire in his langage.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5150.

"Now yeve us drinke," quod this chanon then,
"As swithe all shal be wel, I undertake.
Sitte we doun, and let us mery make."
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,662.

And after, whan it was recorded Unto the doughter, howe it stodee,
The yefte of all this worldes good Ne shuld haue made hir halfe so blithe.
And forth with all the kinge als swith,
For he woll haue hir good assent,
Hath for the queene hir moder sent.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

My ladye reads your swith return;
And, if but one poor straw you burn,
Or do our towers so much molest,
As scare one swallow from her nest,
St. Mary! but we'll light a brand,
Shall warm your hearts in Cumberland.
Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 4.

SWIVEL. Junius writes it Swivel or Swible: and it is probably a diminutive, descending from the Ger. Schweiben; A. S. Swæbban, to sweep.

Any thing so fixed as to sweep round; (sc.) the space, the whole space before it.

The gun is placed on the top, where there is an iron socket for the gun to rest in, and a swivel to turn the mizzel any way.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

The carpenters were ordered to fix eight stocks in the main and fore-tops which were properly fitted for the mounting of swivel guns.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 7.

Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

As therefore he began in the title, so in the next leaf he Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

SYL

This ordinance is in the first table of Solon's laws, and therefore we may not altogether discredit those which say, they did forbid in the old time that men should carry figs out of the countrey of Attica, and that from thence it came that these pick-thanks, which bewray and accuse them that transported figs, were called sycophants.

North. Plutarch, p. 77.

Besides, that it was hard to hold that seat [the publican] without oppression, without exaction; one that best knew it, branded it with poling, and sycophancy.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Matthew called.

A sycophant will every thing admire:
Each verse, each sentence, sets his soul on fire:
All is divine! there's not a word amiss!
He shakes with joy, and weeps with tenderness,
He overpowers you with his mighty praise.

Dryden. Art of Poetry, c. 1.

Yet 'tis well known, that in those times the illiberal sycophantick manner of devotion was by the wiser sort con-temn'd and oft suspected, as knavish and indirect.

Shaftesbury. Miscellaneous Reflections, b. ii. s. 3.

How like a spiritual opium, does it [flattery] intoxicate and abuse the understanding, even with sometimes of men wise and judicious? so that they have knowingly, with their reason awake, and their senses about them, suffered themselves to be cheated and ruined by a sycophantical parasite.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

Nor can a gentleman, without industry, uphold his real interests against the attempts of envy, of treachery, of flattery, of sycophantry, of avarice, to which his condition is obnoxious.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 21.

It is well known to the learned, that the ancient laws of Athens rendered the exportation of figs criminal; that being supposed a species of fruit so excellent in Attica, that the Athenians deemed it too delicious for the palate of any foreigner; and in this ridiculous prohibition they were so much in earnest, that informers were thence called sycophants among them, from two Greek words, which signify figs and discoverer.—Hume. Ess. Of the Balance of Trade.

And liberty [will be] left to deplore a declining cause, while corruption laughs from a Lord Mayor's coach, as he rides in triumph in court, to present, on her knees, the address of sycophancy.—Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, § 4.

The friends of man may therefore hope that panic fears, servile sycophantism, and artful bigotry, will no longer prevail over cool reason and liberal philanthropy.—Id. Ib. § 9.

Some haue affirmed vs rather to barke as dogs, than talke

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 6.

The first voice of nature in the creature, which it uttered even in the cradle, when it was an infant in the world, and therefore perhaps, as children are wont, not so plainly, and syllabically, and distinctly, as could have been wished, is the acknowledgement and worship of one eternal God, creator of that soul we breath by, and world we live in; as one simple, incorporeal, everlasting essence.

Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 14.

Life and understanding, soul and mind, are no syllables or complexions of things, secondary and derivative, which might therefore be made out of things devoid of life and understanding; but simple, primitive, and uncompounded natures.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 858.

Livy and Tacitus, excellent as they are in general, have been convicted of deviating into poetry; and there are many passages in both of them, which, if you attend to the accentual and not to the syllabic quantity, may be scanned like hexameter verses.—Knox. Ess. No. 23.

And some have been who could believe,
(So fondly youthful dreams deceive, Yet harsh be they that blame)
That note so piercing and profound
Will shape and syllable its sound
Into Zuleika's name.—Byron. The Bride of Abydos, c. 2.

A division of the generality of words, as they are actually pronounced, gives us the general laws of syllabication.

That he foryate all his logike.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

For the other judgment by sylogism, as it is a thing most agreeable to the mind of man, so it hath been vehemently and excellently laboured; for the nature of man doth extremely covet to have somewhat in his understanding fixed and immoveable, and as a rest and support of the mind.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

To put the argument into a more approveable sylogistick form, whatsoever is extended is body, or corporeal; but whatsoever is, is extended. Therefore whatsoever is, is body or corporeal. And by consequence there can be no incorporeal deity.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 770.

Minds cleansed and purged from vice, may without sylogistical reasonings, and mathematical demonstrations, have an undoubted assurance of the existence of a God, according to that of the philosopher; purity possesses men with an assurance of the best things.—Id. Ib. Pref. p. xlii.

Sir Edward Cook (then but the Queen's Attourney,) disputed sylogistically against him; whom Cuffe, an admirable logician, could (cæteris paribus) well have encountered. But power will easily make a solecisme to be a sylogisme.
Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 150.

There is one thing more, which I shall desire to be considered concerning reason; and that is, whether sylogism, as is generally thought, be the proper instrument of it, and the usefulest way of exercising this faculty.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 17.

Note, though the terms of proposition may be complex; yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple sylogism, since the complexion does not belong to the sylogistick form of it.—Watts. Logick, pt. iii. c. 2.

'Tis fit before I leave this subject, to take notice of one manifest mistake in the rules of sylogism, viz. that no sylogistical reasoning can be right and conclusive but what has, at least, one general proposition to it.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 17.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove sylogistically. So that sylogism comes after knowledge, and then a man has little or no need of it.—Id. Ib.

Well; be the consequences what it will, you are attempting to prove your point sylogistically.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 21.

Men have endeavoured to transform logic, or the art of reasoning, into a sort of mechanism, and to teach boys to sylogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without any real inward knowledge of the question.
Watts. Logick, pt. iii. c. 2.

To remove this error, Bacon invented his Novum Organum, in which he teaches to reason by induction; a more effectual method of eliciting truth, than the antiquated and trifling forms of a perfect sylogism.—Knox. Ess. No. 52.

Every such process of reasoning, it is well known, may be resolved into a series of legitimate sylogisms, exhibiting separately and distinctly, in a light as clear and strong as language can afford, each successive link of the demonstration.—Stewart. Of the Human Mind, c. 3. § 1.

Writers of strong intellect are often without imagination and sentiment, and consequently dull. They sylogize admirably; but they cannot impress ideas with force, they cannot paint images with the pencil of fancy in the shape and colours of nature.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 69.

There is no body to whom I speak with such unreserved agreeable liberty, because we so much sympathise and (to borrow Parr's new coined word) sylogize.
Sir J. Mackintosh to Mr. More, 27 Sep. 1800.

Paracelsus.

The gnomes, or demons of earth, delight in mischief; but the sylyphs, whose habitation is in the air, are the best conditioned creatures imaginable; for they say, any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits upon a condition very easy to all adepts, an inviolate preservation of chastity.
Pope. Let. to Mrs. A. Fermor on the Rape of the Lock.

Ye sylyphs and sylyphids, to your chief give ear,
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear.

"A token, a badge, a sign to know one by; a secret, private and mystical note," (Cotgrave.)

A type, an image, a representation: also—
A collect; a compendium: "the sum of our belief," (Cotgrave.)

—'Tis true,
You have not writ to me, nor I to you;
And though I now begin, 'tis not to rub
Haunch against haunch, or raise a rhyming club
About the town; this reck'ning I will pay,
Without conferring symbols.
B. Jonson. A Vision on the Muses of M. Drayton.

Thy impress should be the loving elm and vine,
Where now an ancient oak with ivy twine,
Destroyed thy symbol is. Donne, Sat. 6.

The persons who are to be judged: even you, and I, and all the world: kings and priests, nobles and learned, the crafty and the easie, the wise and the foolish, the rich and the poor, the prevailing tyrant and the oppressed party, shall all appear to receive their symbol.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Besides these properties, they are light and giddy-headed, much symbolizing in spirit with our apocalyptic zealots and fiery interpreters of Daniel and other prophets.
Howell, b. i. Let. 14.

Indeed there is a great symbolizing betwixt them in many concurrences.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

We read in Pierius, that an apple was the hieroglyphick of love, and that the Statua of Venus was made with one in her hand. So the little cupids in the figures of Philostratus do play with apples in a garden; and there want not some who have symbolized the apple of Paradise into such constructions.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 1.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 111.

Thus, I fear, it hath fared with the hieroglyphical symples of scripture: which excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed, in the prohibited meats, in the dreams of Pharaoh, Joseph, and many other passages: are oft-times wrackt beyond their symbolizations, and enlarged into constructions disparaging their true intentions.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

We are not ignorant how the Pythagoreans made also all the numbers within the decad, to be symbols of things.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 388.

It may be well doubted whether their symbolick divinity were not design'd rather to conceal their own ignorance in what they pretended to, than to secure the rites and mysteries thereof from the vulgar's profanation.
Pleydell. Ser. at the Funeral of Glanvill.

His laying his hand upon the head of his sacrifice, was a symbolical action, by which he solemnly acknowledged to God that he had justly deserved to suffer that death himself which his sacrifice was suffering for him.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

These also look'd upon the sun as the most lively image of this deity, in which it was worshipped by them, as they likewise worship'd the same deity symbolically in fire, as Maximus Tirus informeth us.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 286.

And that the Orphick philosophy did really agree and symbolize with that which afterward was called Pythagorick and Platonic, and was of the same strain with it, may be gathered from that of Plato in his Cratylus.—Id. Ib. p. 299.

The hebdomad therefore doth not very fitly symbolize with it [the tetrad] neither; because it is barren or begets nothing at all within the decad, for which cause it is called a virgin.—Id. Ib. p. 376.

The symbolic way of writing is of three kinds; the first is that plain and common one of imitating the figure of the thing represented; the second is by typical marks; and the third in a contrary way, of allegorizing by enigmas.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 4.

This seems a clear conclusion from the very nature of our Lord's miracles, which, for the most part, were actions distinctly symbolical of one or other of the spiritual benefits of the redemption.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Daniel. A Panegyric to the King.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow.—Sidney. Arcadia.

The symmetrie, which above all things he observed most precisely in all his workes, is a tearme that cannot properly be expressed by a Latine word.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 8.

At the verie same time lived Asclepiodorus, whome for his singular skill in observing symmetries and just proportions, Apelles himselfe was wont to admire.
Id. Ib. b. xxxv. c. 10.

Who [Leon Alberte] from the school of Pythagoras (where it was a fundamental maxime, that the images of all things are latent in numbers) doth determine the comliest proportion between breadths and heights; reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight.—Reliquiae Wottonianæ, p. 34.

It was both the doctrine of the apostles, and the practice of the church, while it was symmetrall, to obey the magistrate.
More. Mystery of Godliness, (1660,) p. 204.

Sith the longest rib is commonlie about the fourth part of a man, as some rousing symmetrians affirme.
Holinshead. Description of Britaine, c. 1.

Which severe observation of nature by the one in her commonest, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness: this is the clearest reason why some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.—Reliquiae Wottonianæ, p. 56.

I leave it to the anatomists and physiologists to describe the wonderful mechanism and exquisite workmanship of the human body; the erect posture, the figure and shape, the size and stature, the structure and use of every part, and the symmetry of the whole.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Symmetry and proportion contribute greatly to order, because the one gives dispatch to the eye by enabling it to take in objects by pairs, and the other smooths the passage over them by the mutual dependence of parts.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 10.

The taste for finery is more general than for symmetrical beauty or chaste elegance; and many, like Nero, would not be content till they should have spoiled, by gilding it, the statue of a Lysippus.—Knox. Ess. No. 15.

He would soon have supplied every deficiency, and symmetrized every disproportion.—Burke.

Which ioyn together in sweete sympathie,
To work each others ioy and true content.
Spenser. Hymne in Honour of Beautie.

But, in your choice of loves, this well advize,
That, likest to your selves ye them select,
The which your forms first sourse may sympathize,
And with like beauties parts be inly deekt.
Id. Ib.

This mutuall affection which the Greekes call sympathie, whereupon the frame of this world dependeth, and whereby the course of all things else doth stand, tendeth to the use and benefit of man alone.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. Proeme.

And therefore all those ciuill men that liue
By law and rule, will to our numbers giue
The name of good, in which perfection rests;
And feele their strokes with sympathizing brests.
Beaumont. To Prince Charles.

Thus the limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes and is concern'd for them.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

Who, when he reads a city storm'd, forbears
To feel her woes, and sympathize in tears?
Pitt. Vida's Art of Poetry, b. ii.

But understanding and the knowledge of abstract sciences, remainders of the motions thereof, but a perception of another kind, and more inward than that of sense: not sympathetical but unpassionate.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 856.

Wherefore the plastick nature acting neither by knowledge nor by animal fancy, neither electively nor hermetically, must be concluded to act fatally, magically, and sympathetically.—Id. Ib. p. 161.

Sympathy may be considered as an inward feeling, which is excited by the particular and extraordinary situation of another; or which harmonizes with the condition and feelings of its object.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

True love's the gift which God has given
To man alone beneath the heaven.—
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver link, the silken tie
Which heart to heart and mind to mind
In body and in soul can bind.
Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 5.

In general, it is certain, that wherever we go, whatever we reflect on or converse about, every thing still presents us with the view of human happiness or misery, and excites in our breast a sympathetic movement of pleasure or uneasiness.—Hume. Ess. On the Principles of Morals, § 5.

This little may perhaps give occasion to expect a dissertation upon those sympathetic cures spoken of by Sir Kenelm Digby, who tells you that wounds have been healed by applying salves and plaisters to the instrument that made them.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 19.

Common experience is my guide, and that must have informed every body how much we continually sympathize

Symphonious of ten thousand harpes, that tun'd Angelic harmonies.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The mellow harp did not their ears employ,
And mute was all the warlike symphony;
Discourse, the food of souls, was their delight,
And pleasing chat prolong'd the summer's night.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

'Twas thus by the cave of the mountain afar,
While his harp rung symphonious, a hermit began;
No more with himself or with nature at war,
He thought as a sage, though he felt as a man.
Beattie. The Hermit.

SYMPO'SIACK. Cotgrave has Symposiarque, and Heleand also: the master or overseer of a feast. Lat. Symposium; Gr. Συμπόσιον, compo-tatio, a drinking together (συν, and ποσις, a drinking, a potation). Generally,—
A convivial meeting.

And [which expression] is also tolerable, if by desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we onely mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom in sympo-siack meetings, to wear chaplets of roses about their heads.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

This is such a device, that as one said of the witty drunkenness and arts of the symposiac among the Greeks, that among them a dunce could not be drunk.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 11.

It will save the patient from that symtome of being afraid of water; which is incident unto such as be so bitten.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 5.

The physicians speak of a certain disease or madness, called hydrophobia, the symptome of those that have been bitten by a mad-dog, which makes them have a monstrous antipathy to water.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 135.

But now, that essential diseases, as I call them, may be rightly distinguished from those which are only symptomatical, it is very necessary for us to consider, that what symptoms accompany the invasion of this or that stationary fever, such always come at the beginning of a pleurisy or quinsy, when they are only the accidents of such a fever, which was perceiv'd in the foresaid symptomack pleurisy, which came upon the fever that raged in the winter of the year 1675.
Sydenham. Practice of Physick, c. 1. § 4.

The one is but symptomack, or at most secondary in relation to the other.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 197.

The causes of Bubo are eternal or external. The former are viscous humours abounding in the blood or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes sympto-matically.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 9.

He is aware that it is become almost fashionable to stigmatize such sentiments, as no better than empty declamation; but it is an ill symptom, and peculiar to modern times.—Cowper. Task, b. v. Note.

Now while the tales of magicians, and their transformations, were believed, nothing was more symptomatic in this distemper, than such fancied changes by the power of witchcraft.—Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 3.

SY'NAGOGUE. Fr. Synagogue; It. Sinagoga; Sp. Synagoga; Gr. Συναγωγή, συναγ-ειν, colligere, to collect or gather together, (συν, and αγ-ειν.)

An assembly, congregation, or collection; a place of assembly. See the quotation from Pri-deaux.

And Jhesus ghede above al Galilee techinge in the synagogis of hem and prehyng the gospel of the kyngdome.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 4.

And Jesus went about al Galile, teachinge in their synagogues, and preachinge the gospel of ye kyngdome.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And for to han the first chairis,
In synagogues, to hem full dere is.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

They tooke and sacked the cite of Lincolne, spoiled the Jewes, and slue manie of them, entred their synagog, and burnt the booke of their law.
Holinshed. Hen. III. an. 1266.

But the inconvenience of this [gathering the people together in some wide street, or other open place of their city] being soon felt, especially in the winter and stormy seasons of the year, for the remedy hereof they erected them houses or tabernacles, wherein to meet for this purpose, and this was the original of synagogues among them.
Prideaux. Connection, vol. ii. p. 534.

SYNALÆ'PHA. Gr. Συναλοιφή, from συνα-λειφ-ειν, to draw together, to contract.

Virgil, though he is smooth where smoothness is required, yet he is so far from affecting it, that he seems rather to disdain it; frequently makes use of synalaphas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse.
Dryden. Theocritus, Pref.

SY'NARCHY. Gr. Συναρχία, (συν, with, and αρχη, principality, rule.) See the quotation.

The synarchies or joint reigns of father and son have rendered the chronology a little difficult.
Stackhouse. History of the Bible.

SYNA'XES. Gr. Συναξίς, from συναγ-ειν, to collect.

A synagogue, assembly, or congregation.

It is the office of the presbyters and ministers of religion to declare public criminals, and scandalous persons to be such, that when the leprosy is declared the flock may avoid the infection; and then the man is excommunicate, when the people are warned to avoid the danger of the man or the reproach of the crime to withdraw from his society, and not to bid him God speed, not to eat and celebrate synaxes and church meetings, with such who are declared criminal and dangerous.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, pt. ii. c. 5.

Yet one must not be omitted, which in such times the apostle very diligently warns us of, that of the not giving over the assembling our selves together, as oft as we can gain opportunities for them, holding up the synaxes, how thin soever they are fain to be.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 569.

More. On the Seven Churches, p. 141.

The things that are found to be synchronal, have also a natural connexion and complication one with another.
Id. Mystery of Godliness, p. 182.

All these synchronize with the six first trumpets.
Id. Ib. p. 191.

But for ought ever I could see in dissections, it is very difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, especially the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being very far from being synchronical.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 103.

Muscular motions by frequency of concurrence gradually adhere together, and excite each other either synchronically or successively, according to the order of impressions.
Belsham. Philosophy of the Mind, c. 3. § 2.

Sensations are impressed either at the same instant of time, or in contiguous successive instants. Hence it follows, that the corresponding associations are either synchronous, or successive.—Id. Ib.

Grace in the Senate. Cam. July, 1662.

But perhaps some may thinke that Aristotle, Platoes schollar, who was the wonder of the world for his wit, and vnderooke to censure and syndicate both his master, and all other law-makers before him, saw clearer in matter of lawes for the reformation of manners and the good of the common-wealth, then he.—Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. § 4.

SYNDROME. Gr. Συνδρομη, concurus, (συν, with, and δρμειν, to run, q. d. συνδρμειν, concurrere.)

A concourse, a concurrence.

For all things being linkt together by an uninterrupted chain of causes; and every single motion owning a dependence on such a syndrome of pre-required motors: we can have no true knowledge of any, except we comprehended all, and could distinctly pry into the whole method of casual concatenations.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

SYNECDOCHE. } Lat. Synechdoche; Gr. Συνεκδοχη, (συν, and εκ—SYNECDOCHICALLY. } δεχσθαι, concipere, comprehendere.) See the quotation from Wilson.

Intellection, called of the Grecians synecdoche, is a trope, whē we gather or iudge the whole by the part, or part by the whole.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 177.

Here he sate twelve years; and that cathedrall may (by a synecdoche of a novel part for the whole) challenge his interment, having his heart inclosed in a wall, though his body be buried at Waverly in Surry 1280.

Fuller. Worthies. Cambridgeshire.

And the same philologer further adds, the gods or stars, do by a synecdoche signifie all things, or the whole world, a part being put for the whole.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 358.

Isis is used for Thamesis, by a synecdochical kind of speech, or by a poetical liberty, in using one for another.

Drayton. Mrs. Shore to Edward IV. Note 2.

Should I, Lindamor, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there the various shapes of human misery, and how many souls, narrowly lodged (if I may so speak) in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust; those miserable persons by the loss of one limb after another surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piece-meal.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 280.

The decalogue itself—which among all parts of that law looks fairest toward a general importance and obligation; which yet is so specially directed, and is indeed peculiarly called the covenant between God and that people; viz. synecdochically, as being the principal part directive of their duty.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

SYNOD. } Fr. Synode; It. Sinodo; Sp. Synodo; Lat. Synodus; Gr. Συνδος (συν, and odos, the way); quod multi congregantur in una via.

An assembly of persons (of one faith, for one and the same purpose.)

Thys woerde, church, besyde all the signyfycations, that Tyndall hath here shewed vs: dooeth signifye that parte of the church, that in synodes and counsailes doe represent the whole church.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 406.

Dionysius, Bishop of Rome, in a letter, (wrote, very probably, with the advice and consent of his clergy synodically convened,) very particularly explains the doctrine of the Trinity, as professed at that time.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

Towards the end of the second century, the churches of Greece and Asia adopted the useful institutions of provincial synods, and they may justly be supposed to have borrowed the model of a representative council from the celebrated examples of their own country, the Amphictyons, the Achæan league, or the assemblies of the Ionian cities.

Gibbon. Decline & Fall, c. 15.

The representations of the Christian republic were regularly assembled in the spring and autumn of each year; and these synods diffused the spirit of ecclesiastical discipline and legislation through the hundred and twenty provinces of the Roman world.—Id. Ib. c. 20.

SYNONYMIIZE, v. } See the quotation from Camden.

— One thing I must tell you, As I am the state-scout, you may think me an informer. Mast. They are synonyma.

Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act i. sc. 2.

You have heard in Plutarch and Apuleius such variety of Isis' titles, and, in Clemens of Alexandria, so large circuits of her travels, it were no more wonder to hear of her name in this northern climate, than in Egypt: especially we having three rivers of note synonymies with her.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2. Illust.

Repetitions here, and doubted sentences, and enlargements by synonymal words, &c. before the shutting up of the period; are but necessary.

Instruct. for Oratory, (1682.) p. 95.

In this manner the fifth canon either useth them synonymally, or complaineth of one abuse in the preamble, and provideth against another in the decree.

Spelman. De Sepultura.

Likewise this word "fortis" wee may synonymize after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, aduentrous, &c.—Camden. Rem. Of the English Tongue.

That word substance being used by them as synonymous with essence, and applied to universals likewise, as it is by the peripateticks.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 601.

Wherefore according to that larger notion of the word αγενητον, as taken synonymously with αυτογενες, and αωθυ-προστατον, there were very many of the Pagan theologers who agreed with Christians in this, That God is the only ingenerate or unmade being.—Id. Ib. p. 255.

I think that it is agreed, that a definition is nothing else but the shewing the meaning of one word by several other not synonymous terms.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4.

I have observed in a former place that will and pleasure are reputed synonymous terms, nor would it be thought a different question should one ask "will" you have such a thing, or "do" you desire or please to have it.

SYNOPSIS. } Lat. Synopsis; Gr. Συνοψις, SYNOPTICAL. } (συν, simul, and οψις, aspectus, SYNOPTICALLY. } from οπτ-εσθαι, to see.)

A view of the whole or of all the parts at once; a general, a compendious view; a contraction or compression into one view.

Not to reckon up the infinite helps of interlinearies, brevities, synopses, and other loitering gear.

Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

But as to the rest, let it suffice, that he diligently follow the observations which (by great industry) we have collected together, and here present him, as so many synoptical tables, calculated for his monthly use.

Evelyn. Kalendarium.

I shall more synoptically here insert a catalogue of all dying materials.—Sir W. Petty. Sprat. Hist. R. S. p. 295.

But that the reader may see in one view the exactness of the method, as well as force of the argument, I shall here draw up a short synopsis of this epistle.

Warburton. A Comment. on Mr. Pope's Essay on Man.

Those objections to Christianity, some of its most celebrated defenders have collected together from all ages and a great variety of neglected books, and then combined in a single portable volume, so as to render it a convenient manual or synopsis of infidelity.—Knox. Christ. Philos. § 1.

SYNTAX. } Lat. Syntaxis; Gr. Συνταξις, SYNTACTICAL. } (συν, simul, and ταξις, ordo.)

The order or arrangement, the orderly composition or construction.

Thus then, to the knowledge of the most contemptible effect in nature, 'tis necessary to know the whole syntax of causes, and their particular circumstances and modes of action.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

Syntaxe is the second part of grammar, that teacheth the construction of words.

B. Jonson. English Grammar, b. ii. c. 1.

Syntaxe appertaineth both to words of number, and without number, where the want, and superfluity of any part of speech are too generall, and common exceptions.

Id. Ib. c. 2.

A figure is divided into tropes, &c. grammatical, orthographical, syntactical.

SYNTHETICALLY. } For the application in Logic, see the quotations from Port Royal Logick, and The Art of Thinking.

And the synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered, and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations.—Newton. Optics.

The other [sorts of methods] to make it [truth] understood by others when it is found out, which is called synthesis, or the method of composition, and may also be call'd the method of doctrine.

Ozell. Port Royal Logick, pt. iv. c. 2.

The methods [he observes] of attaining a knowledge of nature, may be two; either the analytic or the synthetic. The first is proceeding from the causes to the effects. The second, from the effects to the causes.

Hooke. Posthumous Works, p. 330.

That method has been call'd analytic, which in teaching follows the very order of invention; and the opposite method has receiv'd the name of synthetic.

Crousaz. The Art of Thinking, pt. iv. c. 8.

Philosophers hasten too much from the analytic to the synthetic method, that is, they draw general conclusions from too small a number of particular observations and experiments.—Bolingbroke. Ess. Human Knowledge, § 3.

In early life, he [Condillac] distinguished himself by an ingenious work, in which he professed to trace analytically the history of our sensations and perceptions; and yet it has been very justly remarked of late, that all the reasonings contained in it are purely synthetical.

Stewart. Elements of Philosophy, vol. ii. c. 4. s. 3.

The plan proceeds synthetically from parts to the whole. Walker.

SYRIASM. An idiom peculiar to the Syriac.

A strange language acquired by illiterate men, in the ordinary way, would be full of the idioms of their native tongue, just as the Scripture Greek is observed to be full of Syriasm and Hebraisms.—Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace.

SYRINGE, n. } Fr. Syringue; It. Siringa;
SYRINGE, v. } Sp. Siringa; Lat. Syrinx; Gr. Συριγξ, a pipe or reed. Applied to—
A pipe or tube through which any thing (liquid) is cast, injected.

The like devise to this, namely, of clystres, we learned first of a fowle in the same Ægypt, which is called Ibis (or the blacke Storke.) This bird having a crooked and hooked bill, useth it in stead of a syringe or pipe, to squirt water into that part, whereby it is most kind and holosome to void the dounge and excrements of meat, and so purgeth and cleanseth her bodie.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 27.

A little while since I syringed into a dog's jugular vein about two quarts of warm water.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 464.

SYRTIS. See SIRT. Fr. Syrte, a quicksand, or shelf of sand in the sea or river, (Cotgrave.)

Quencht in a boggie syrtis, neither sea, Nor good dry land. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

SY'STEMATIZER. } A collocation, a construction, a combination, a connexion—of parts into a whole; a connected series of dependent, or successive parts.

I must admire thee, but to praise were vain,
 What every tasting palate so approves,
 Thy martial Pyrrhic and thy epic strain,
 Digesting wars with heart-uniting loves,
 The two first authors of what is compos'd
 In this round system all. Seiden. To Drayton.

Much more is it behooveful that young students in so high, so spacious, so large a profession, be advised nor to think themselves sufficiently provided upon their acquaintance with some notitia, or systeme of some technical divine. Hales. Rem. Ser. 2 Pet. iii. 16.

Which is here called by us, the true intellectual system of the universe; in such a sense, as atheism may be called a false system thereof; the word intellectual being added, to distinguish it from the other, vulgarly so called, systems of the world, (that is the visible and corporeal world) the Ptolemaick, Tychonick, and Copernican; the two former of which, are now commonly accounted false, the latter true. Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref.

It has long seemed to me none of the least impediments of the real advancement of true natural philosophy, that men have been so forward to write systems of it, and have thought themselves obliged either to be altogether silent, or not to write less than an entire body of physiology. Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 300.

All this I must confess and say, because experience constrains me; and I do not know why systematick notions should sway more than that.—Glanvill, Ser. 1.

Nor has the systematical way of writing been prejudicial only to the proficiency of some readers, but also to the reputation of some writers of systematical books. Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 300.

I am very sensible of my being far from having such a stock of experiments and observations, as I judge requisite to write systematically.—Id. Ib. p. 302.

Systematists in botany arrange plants into certain orders, classes, or genera.—Chambers.

He who possesses systematick books of morality will not easily find better guides, except in religious books, but yet he will be oftener tempted to take from his shelves a volume of the Spectator.—Knox. Ess. No. 1.

It is not possible to give any thing like a systematical account of the subordination of these classes to each other, without parting from that strict veracity, which, in works of this nature, is more satisfactory than conjectures, however ingenious.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 6.

But is this any proof that there is no system of morals; or that our urging those truths systematically, and under all their dependencies, which the Evangelists proposed singly and without connexion, is a deserting the foundations of the gospel.—Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

Yet to suit it [ritual law] to theologic purposes, system-makers have endeavoured, in their usual manner, to interpret it away, as if it only signified God's suffering the Israelites to fall into idolatry.—Id. Divine Leg. b. iv. s. 6.

Diseases were healed, and buildings erected, before medicine and architecture were systematized into arts. Harris. Philological Inquiry.

Aristotle may be called the systematizer of his master's doctrines.—Id. Ib.

TA'CIT.

TA'CITLY.

TA'CITURN.

TACITURNITY.

Fr. Tacite, taciturne; It. Tacito, taciturno; Sp. Tacito, taciturno; Lat. Tacitus, from tac-ere, which (Vossius thinks) is from Gr. ἄκ-ειν, the unused theme of ἄκωω, quietus, ne hiscens quidem (comprimens os, Scheidius). (See SILENT.) Tacit is opposed to—speaking, to—uttering or emitting any sound, any audible or perceptible notification.

Speechless, soundless; unexpressed by speech or audible sound; silent, still, quiet; undeclared, unnoticed, unexpressed.

The reason is, because he who had no power over me, could not promise but with a tacite condition; and though he were guilty of temerity and an interpretative breach of promise, yet if the other fails, he is directly and properly guilty.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 5.

He [Aristotle] in his Rhetoricks says that some do divine (not demonstrate) that some things are just or unjust by nature, without any covenant or society; intimating, that without a covenant or contract, tacite or explicite, there can be no law.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

This relies also upon a tacit or implicit permission of law; for in sentences given by judges, and to be executed by the ministers of law, the condemn'd person is not commanded, nor yet trusted with the execution, and it is wholly committed to ministers of purpose.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

While we should attend to our addresses towards God, we are to consider whether the point be true, or no, and by that time we have tacitely discoursed it, we are upon another point, which also perhaps is as questionable as the former.—Id. On Set Forms of Liturgy, § 104.

When a prejudice works tacitly, undiscernibly, and irresistibly of the person so wrought upon, the man is to be pitied, not condemned, though possibly his opinion deserves it highly.—Id. Liberty of Prophesying, § 11.

And in those things in which they have agreed tacitely, or expressly, they have no obligation but what they bring upon themselves, as penalties, forfeitures, obloquies and the like.
Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

But whatsoever be ye manner other of my sayng & moderation, or els of my silēce & taciturnitie, neuertheles we are tied & bound to that law which God doth geue vnto vs.

Caluyn. Four Sermons, Ser. 1.

A man shall be so far from suffering or approving these abominatiōs wher with the name of God moste shamfully & vnwortheli is polluted, that whē he shall beholde them, he shalbe able in no wise to suffer dissimulation, silēce, and taciturnitie.—Id. Ib.

He is to be counted a wise and prudent man, who can hold his tongue at those times, and in such occasions as require taciturnity and silence.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 229.

The measure of what is every where call'd and esteem'd virtue and vice, is this approbation or dislike, praise or blame, which by a secret and tacit consent establishes it self in the several societies, tribes, and clubs of men in the world.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 28.

Grieve was very submissive, respectful, and remarkably taciturn.—Smollett.

Friendship, when strict, comprehends a tacit agreement and covenant between those who enter into it, to look upon the concerns of each other in a great measure as their own.
Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 21.

Let it, however, be remembered by those who bring such instances in their own justification, that the cause of Addison's taciturnity was a natural diffidence in the company of strangers.—Knox. Ess. No. 101.

TACK, n. } Dut. and Ger. Tacken; A.S.
TACK, v. } Tac-can, tangere, to touch;
TA'CKLE, n. } and, consequentially, capere, TA'CKLE, v. } to take.
TA'CKLING, n. } To touch, to take, to seize,
to catch, to keep, to hold, to hold fast, to fix, to fasten. See ATTACK, and TAG.

Tack (of a ship),—the way, course, direction—taken; or in which she is taken, or kept; certain ropes which confine other parts are also called tacks; to tack, to take or hold, to keep in—a course or way; another course or way.

Tackle,—that which (sails, ropes, &c.) takes or holds or keeps, or by means of which a ship is taken, held or kept, guided or directed. Tackle (for hunting, shooting, fishing, &c.),—by which beasts, birds, fish, &c. are taken, or caught. Generally,—furniture, implements, equipment.

Tack (a small nail),—to hold, or fix or fasten.

Tack (Fr. Tache),—a touch (sc.) with any thing foul or defiling, or otherwise injurious; a spot, a stain, a blemish.

A shefe of peacock arwes bright and kene
Under his belt he bare ful thriftilly.

Wel coude he dresse his taket yemanly.

Chaucer. Prolog. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 104.

Thē this sayd lettre was tacked vpō y^e crosse in Chepe, whiche at that daye was called the newe crosse, in the nyght before the day of seynt Denys.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1325.

But howe it was, as this shete was tacked about his bodye, the sewer takynge his candell to burne of the ende of the trede, or he were ware the fyre fastened in the shete, & so brent his flesshe.—Fabyan. Chronicle, an. 1389.

Yet it pleased God to calme the storme, and wee unriued our sheates, tackes, halliers, and other ropes, and mored our ship to the trees close by the rockes.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 847.

The captaine and master, as occasion serued, would take in, and heave out the top-salles, the master onely attended on the sprit-saile, and all of vs at the capsten without sheats and tacks.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 842.

It is also ordeined, that if any one or moe of the said 3. ships shal be out of sight either before or behinde the Admirall, that then the rest of the ships shall tacke or take off their sailes in such sort as they may meete and come together, in as good order as may be.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 296.

Then wee set sayle and stood to the eastward, and at mid-night tacked about to the west.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 584.

Thus than in this the goddess shewe their power. For all the vnderstandynges are tacked to one free wyll.
The Golden Boke, c. 43.

First you shall before the ship doth begin to lade, goe aboard, and shall there take, and write one inuentorie, by the aduise of the master, or of some other principall officer there aboard, of all the tackle, apparell, &c.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 272.

You shall make a iust and true inuentorie in euery ship and vessell appointed for this voyage of all the tackle, munition, and furniture belonging to them at their setting fourth hence.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 755.

Within few dayes after the Indian kings returned to Charles shipt with so good store of cordage, that there was found sufficient for tackling of the small pinnesse.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 318.

Alas (quod I) our pompe good God must be,
Our sayle, our sterne, our tackling, and our trust.
Gascoigne. Voiage into Hollande, an. 1572.

And now were there in the English fleet 140 sail, all of them ships fit for fight, good sailers, and nimble and tight for tacking about which way they would.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588.

And whereas most men thought they would tack about again and come back.—Id. Ib.

Take down my buckler, and sweep the cobwebs off; and grind the pick out, and fetch a nail or two; and tack on bracers.—Beaum. & Fletcher. Cupid's Revenge, Act iv.

Young Lo. Peace, or I'll tack your tongue up to your roof.
Id. The Scornful Lady, Act ii.

Thou'lt begger my derision utterly
If thou stay it longer, I shall want a laugh:
If I knew where to borrow a contempt
Would hold thee tack, stay and be hang'd thou shouldst then.
Id. Wit at several Weapons, Act iii.

Some kind of yron there is that serveth onely, if it be wrought in short and small works, as namely, for nailles, studs, and tackes emploied about greeves and leg harneis.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 14.

You do not the thing that you would; that is perhaps perfectly, purely without some tack or stain.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 512.

— My ships ride in the bay
Ready to disembogue, tackled, and mann'd
Even to my wishes.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Knight of Malta, Act i. sc. 3.

The Englishmen would in no wise giue ouer, but did sticke to their tackle.

Holinshed. History of England, b. v. c. 33.

Here she a while may make her safe abode,
Till she repaired have her tackles spent,
And wants supplide; and then againe abroad
On the long voiage whereto she is bent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Friendship is to be used according as need requireth more or lesse, like to the helme of a ship, which both holdeth it hard, and also giveth head, or the tackling which spread and draw, hoise and strike saile, as occasion serveth.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 187.

For a wise statesman, in care, affection, and fore-cast, ought not to refuse any publike charge whatsoever, but to take paines in having an eye to all, and to understand and know every particular; and not to reserve himselfe close, as it were, some holy anchor or sacred tackling laid up in some secret cabin of a ship, and not to attend only upon extremities, and to tarry untill he be employed upon occasions of great necessity and utmost.—Id. Ib. p. 300.

You, to give a specimen of your great dexterity in forming a scheme, have marvellously tacked two parts together, one of which will suit only with the Socinian scheme, the other only with the Arian or Catholic.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 376.

Laws were also called legis saturæ, when they were of several heads and titles; like our tacked bills of parchment.
Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

Therefore we stood off to the southward till two a clock in the morning; then we tackt, and stood in all the morning, and about 12 a clock, the 1st day of October, we anchored again at the place from whence we were driven.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

Steph. Port hard, port! the wind grows scant, bring the tack aboard.—Dryden. The Tempest, Act i.

Some tacks had been made to money-bills in King Charles's reign.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1705.

The reasonableness of uniting to a money-bill one of a different nature, which is usually called tacking, hath been likewise much debated, & will admit of argument enough.

Swift. Four last Years of Q. Anne.

There being neither blocks nor cordage sufficient for tackles to haul the bark on shore, this occasioned a new difficulty.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 3.

Give 'em a broad side; the dice run at all,
Down comes the mast and yard, and tacklings fall.
Dryden. Amboyna, Act iii. sc. 1.

About two hours afterwards we saw land a-head, upon which we tacked and stood off till six, when we stood in to take a nearer view of it.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 7.

When they change tacks they throw the vessel up in the wind, ease off the sheet, and bring the heel or tack-end of the yard to the other end of the boat, and the sheet in like manner.—Id. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 2.

— If a wight, who hated trade,
The sails and tackle for a vessel bought,
Madman or fool he might be justly thought.
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 3.

The hostile surge and wind's increasing power
From head to stern the planks and tackling tore.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xix.

TACT. } Fr. Tactique; It. Tattica; TA'CTICKS. } Sp. Tactica; Gr. Taktikos, from TACTICIAN. } τατ-ειν, ponere, statuere, to put or place, to put in order.

The art of placing, or disposing; arranging the places or positions; changing, manœuvring the places or position of an army, fleet, &c.

Tact (a modern word, frequent in conversation,) is applied to a skill or adroitness in adapting to circumstances our words or deeds.

Tactician is in common use.

Because order is as variable as the tactics of an army, and decency is a relative term, and hath a transient and changeable sence.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

Tactics and fortification, with the sciences immediately connected with them, must be studied, as essentially necessary to the military and naval officer.—Knox. Ess. No. 19.

TA'CTABLE. } Lat. Tactilis, tactio, from TA'CTILE. } tactum, past part. of tang-ere,
TA'CTION. } to touch.
TA'CTUAL. } That may be touched; that may be felt by the sence of touch.

Tact, i. e. touch, the sence of touch, is found in Ross.

Of all creatures, the sence of tact is most exquisite in man.
Ross. Microcosmia (1652.)

— They [women] being created
To be both tractable and tactable,
When they are useful.
Massinger. Parliament of Love, Act ii. sc. 1.

We have iron, brass, wood, stones, sounds, light, figuration, tactile qualities; some things of a more active, some things of a more passive nature.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 156.

Nay phancy and sence it self, upon this hypothesis, could hardly scape from becoming non-entities too, forasmuch as neither phancy nor sence falls under sense, but only the objects of them; we neither seeing vision, nor feeling taction, nor hearing audition, much less, hearing sight, or seeing taste, or the like.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 636.

Distance is nothing else but the privation of tactual union, and the greater distance the greater privation, and the greater privation the more to doe to regain the former positive condition.—More. Antidote against Atheism, App.

And if we can bear it with some delight in these earthly bodies, whose parts will grow hard and stiff for want of due heat, it can prove nothing else but a new modification of tactual pleasure to those æthereal inhabitants whose bodies are not constipated as ours, but are themselves a kinde of agile light and fire.—Id. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 19.

He calls it a kind of tactual union, and a certain presence better than knowledge, and the joyning of our own centre, as it were, with the centre of the universe.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 549.

TAD-POLE. A. S. Tad, a toad, and folu, pullus.

The young of the toad.

Take the ashes of young frogs breeding in the water, whilst they be tadpoles and have little wriggling tails.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 10.

But short shall be his reign: his rigid yoke
And tyrant power will puny sects provoke;
And frogs and toads, and all the tadpole train,
Will croak to heaven for help, from this devouring crane.
Dryden. The Medal.

In the tadpole estate frogs are provided with a fin-like tail, which seems to constitute the chief part of their bulk, but drops off as the growing limbs extend, and gives notice that its continuance is superfluous and unnecessary.

Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. v. Note.

TA'FFEREL. Dut. Tafel, tafelreel, tafereel, a table.

The broad surface or table; applied to the upper part of the stern of a ship.

The sea now broke most surprizingly all round us, and a large tumbling swell threatened to poop us; by which the long-boat, at this time moored a-stern, was on a sudden canted so high, that it broke the transom of the commodore's gallery, whose cabin was on the quarter-deck, and would doubtless have risen as high as the tafferel, had it not been for the stroke, which stove the boat all to pieces.

Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 2.

And [I] found the quarter-deck crowded with the natives, and the mangled head, or rather part of it (for the under jaw and lip were wanting) lying on the tafferel.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 5.

The first thing he did after coming a-board, was to measure the length of the ship, by fathoming her from the tafferel to the stern.—Id. Ib. c. 7.

TA'FFETA. Fr. Taffetas; It. Taffetà; Sp. Tafetan; and in modern Gr. Tafeta: of unknown origin. Skinner thinks it may be of Indian or Persian origin, or from the Lat. Tapes. See TAPESTRY.

In sanguin and in perse he clad was alle
Lined with taffata, and with sendalle.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 441.

First, great store of golde, which they carie to the Indies, made in plates like to little shippes, and in value three and twentie caracts a peece, very great abundance of fine silke, cloth of damaske and taffata.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 229.

Our captaine determined to diuide amongst vs certain garments of taffata, with clokes and sales, and a piece of taffata.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 404.

In the mean time I got a card, and lap'd it up handsome in a piece of taffata, and put strings to the taffata, and when he came, gave it him to hang about his neck.

Selden. Table-Talk. Devils.

Reason is such a box of quicksilver that it abides no where; it dwells in no settled mansion; it is like a dove's neck, or a changeable taffata.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

Mer. Perform this, help me to this great heir by learning, and you shall want no black cloaks; taffaties, silk grogans, sattins and velvets are mine, they shall be yours.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Woman Hater, Act ii.

TAG, n. } Skinner,—from the verb to tack,

The metal fixed to the point, for greater ease in use; any thing tacked, attached, or affixed; hanging or appending; any worthless appendage.

But the rest of the multitude of women and children (for they came from home and passed the Rhine tag and rag) beganne to flie here and there euery way.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 92.

Is wittle nowe wente so wandring from thy minde?
Are all thy points so voide of reasons taggs?
Well so mayst thou come roysting home in raggs.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Of the other two, one is reserved for such as be comelie personages and void of lothsome diseases; the other is left common for tag and rag; but clenched dailie as the other is, whereby it becommeth the wholesomer.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 23.

For upon the like proclamation there, they all came in both tagg and ragg, and when as afterwards many of them were denyed to be received, they bade them doe with them what they would, for they would not by any meanes returne againe, nor goe forth.—Spenser. State of Ireland.

I Shep. And my green slops I was married in; my bonnet
With my carnation point with silver tags, boyes.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Prophetess, Act v. sc. 3.

Clow. For no cause, gentlemen,
Unless it be for wearing shoulder-points,
With longer tags than his.—Id. The Nice Valour, Act iii.

So wild, so pointed, and so staring,
That I should wrong them by comparing Hedge-hogs, or porcupines' small taggers,
To their more dangerous swords and daggers.
Cotton. To John Bradshaw, Esq.

So that really verse in those days was but down-right prose, tagged with rhymes.—Waller. Poems, Pref.

Other hypotheses were invented to maintain these; and by tagging one hypotheses to another, men deviated at least so far from natural theology, and raised so much confusion in their notions about it, that they had no means left of returning to the first principle of this theology.
Bolingbroke. Fragments of Essays, § 42.

Every one knows, that many a fine piece of music is deformed by the most wretched rhymes that were ever tagged by a hungry poetaster.—Knox. Ess. No. 71.

To raise taxes, to levy taxes; a levy upon any persons, are, he observes, common expressions.
Taille is—

A task or tax; an impost, an excise.

The bisshop of Cantebire fulle bold his ansuere was,
For him & alle his schire he vouwed to S. Thomas, other living creatures find it at the tip of their tongue only;

but man tasteth as well with the pallat or roufe of his mouth.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

The taille, as it still subsists in France, may serve as an example of those ancient tallages. It is a tax upon the profits of the farmer, which they estimate by the stock that he has upon the farm.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 2.

The ancient lords, though extremely unwilling to grant, themselves, any pecuniary aid to their sovereign, easily allowed him to tailage, as they called it, their tenants, and had not knowledge enough to foresee how much this must,
in the end, affect their own revenue.—Id. Ib.

the city Chios.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 399.

There is found in the summer a kinde of spider called a taint, of a red colour, and so little of body that ten of the largest will hardly out-weigh a grain; this by countreypeople is accounted a deadly poison unto cows and horses; who if they suddenly die, and swell thereon, ascribe their death hereto, and will commonly say, they have licked a taint.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

Nor doth our church admit, at least

In verdant meads they sport; and wide around Lie human bones, that whiten all the ground;
The ground polluted floats with human gore,
And human carnage taints the dreadful shore.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

If this be a taint which so universally infects mankind, the greater care should be taken to lay it open under its due name, thereby to excite the greater care in its prevention and cure.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 33.

That epidemical taint, with which king James infected
the minds of men, continued upon us.
Bolingbroke. Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 2.

Let these, the temperate sense of taste reveal,
And give, while nature spreads the simple meal,
The palate pure, to relish health design'd,
From luxury as taintless as your mind.

B. Jonson.) Wachter refers to the A. S. Talg, a tincture, from telgan, tingere, illinere, to stain, to dye. Cotgrave calls it—

A tender and transparent stone, which indures extreme heat and cold without breaking, and hath been heretofore used instead of glass.

Talc (in Latine Talchum) is a cheap kind of mineral, which this county plentifully affords, though not so fine as what is fetch'd from Venice. It is white and transparent like chrysell, full of streaks or veins, which prettily scatter themselves.—Fuller. Worthies. Sussex.

And that if the tale-tellers called this rigour, it rather proceeded of their disobedience, then of my nature, lesse subiect to cruelty then they were to rebellion.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 351.

My lady Boleyn (her kinswoman) said to her, such desire as you have had to such tales, [tale-carriers or tellers, as some perhaps of her women were] have brought you to this.
State Trials. 28 Hen. VIII. an. 1536.

Somewhat look to the punishment of tale-bearers, and Beaum. & Fletch. The Coronation, Act iii.

"My following fates to thee, O king, are known,
And the bright partner of thy royal throne.
Enough: in misery can words avail?
And what so tedious as a twice-told tale?"
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

Thither the household feathery people crowd,
The crested cock, with all his female train,
Pensive, and dripping; while the cottage-hind Hangs o'er th' enlivening blaze, and *tales*ful there Recounts his simple frolic. Thomson. Winter.

A tale well told, or a comedy or a tragedy well wrought up, may have a momentary effect upon the mind, by heating the imagination, surprising the judgment, and affecting strongly the passions.
Bolingbroke. On the Study of History, Let. 4.

They are said, however, to be the current money of the merchant, and yet are received by weight, and not by tale, in the same manner as ingots of gold and bars of silver are at present.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 4.

TA'LENT. Lat. Talentum; from Gr. Ταλαντον, from Ταλα-ειν, to bear, to sustain; prima sua significatione libram, qua pondera appenduntur.
Fr. Talente; It. Talento; Sp. Talento. The French and Italian apply the word—to the will, lust, appetite, an earnest humour unto; and in Old English it is so used, (see Skinner.) In English (met.) the common usage is—from the parable in the New Testament—

Endowments to put to use: generally, mental endowments.

The mental wealth, or strength; or means or powers of, or skill in, acquiring or attaining; faculty, ability, or capacity of mind.

Dr. Webster has the word Talented—"furnished with talents, possessing skill or talents;" and it has been too hastily used in common speech—here.

And whanne he bigan for to putte resoun oon was offride to him that oughte to him ten thousynd talentis.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 18.

And when he had begon to reckon, one was broughte vnto

Bible, 1551. Ib.

For as a man that goith in pilgrimage, clepide hise goodis, and to oon he gaf fyve talentis, to an othir twayne; and to an othir oon, to ech aftir his owne vertu.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 25.

Lykewise as a certayne mā redy to take his iorney to a straunge countre, called his seruantes & deliuered to the his goodes. And vnto one he gaf v. talentes, to another. ii. & to another one: to euery mā after his abillite.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For after that thei haue caste awaie hir iyen, fro the light of the soueraine sothefastnesse, to lowe thynges and darcke, anone thei darcken by the cloude of ignorance, and be

To be in holy churche a thefe,
But not to stele a vestement.
For that is nothyng my talente.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And truly whomesoeuer I perceiue to bee an eagre aduersarie to Erasmus writings, I (as my poore iudgemente leadeth me) cannot but suppose the same to be an indurate emie to the gospell, whiche Erasmus dooeth according to the measure and porcion of his talente feithfully labour to set forth and promote.—Udal. Erasmus, vol. i. Pref.

— Well youth, your praises shall not runne
With vnrewarded feete on mine, your halfe a talents prise Ile make a whole one.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

It being highly rational to think, even were revelation silent in the case, that as men employ those talents God has given them here, they shall accordingly receive their rewards at the close of the day, when their sun shall set, and night shall put an end to their labours.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 14.

These fruitful seeds within your mind they sow'd;
'Twas yours t' improve the talent they bestow'd.
Dryden. Cydon & Iphigenia.

It is no inconsiderable branch of the minister's art to discern the talents of men, to know what they are fit for, and employ every one in the way wherein he may be most use-full.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 35.

If such escape contagion, and emerge
Pure from so foul a pool to shine abroad,
And give the world their talents and themselves,
Small thanks to those, whose negligence or sloth
Expos'd their inexperience to the snare,
And left them to an undirected choice.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 577.

Many loves there be that stirre and move a man, though they meet not with such minds as naturally are disposed and forward to musick or poetry: and well may these loves be without pipes, without harps, viols, lutes, and stringed instruments; and yet not lesse talkative nor ardent, than those in old time.—Id. Ib. p. 976.

Then Nestor thus—"These vain debates forbear,

Words learn'd by rote a parrot may rehearse,
But talkyng is not always to converse;
Not more distinct from harmony divine,
The constant creaking of a country sign.

Cowper. Conversation.

Nevertheless it would appear, on a fair examination, that these arrogant talkers are only half learned, and that pride fills up the mighty void of sense.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 61.

There is no need of shewing particularly how abominable it [falsehood] must be, when deliberately employed in private or party contests, in supplanting and undermining, in prosecuting schemes of unwarrantable gain, in the service of revenge, malice, or envy, in the gratification of idle talka-tiveness, or of a desire to seem knowing and important.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

With such cautions there is no doubt but that talkative-ness is greatly to be preferred to taciturnity, both for our own and others' pleasure and improvement.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 47.

TALL. } Skinner refers to the Welsh; but TALLNESS. } prefers the Fr. Taille, from tailleur, to cut. Tooke considers tall, and the Fr. word taille, as applied to stature, to mean—raised, lifted up, and to be past part. of the A. S. verb Tilian, to lift up, to till, (qv.)

Raised, elevated, exalted, eminent, lofty, of great height; it is applied (met.) to men of high spirit, lofty courage.

So Tyndall being a man of no great stature went before,

And trees be growing there to that talnesse, that a man cannot shoot a shaft over them.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 2.

Yet they soon stood off, being terrified with the talness of the ship and the multitude of defendants.

Camden. History of Elizabeth, an. 1592.

As when the mountain-oak, or poplar tall,
Or pine, fit mast for some great admiral,
Groans to the oft-heav'd ax, with many a wound,
Then spreads a length of ruin o'er the ground.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

I fear to go out of my depth, in sounding imaginary fords, that are real gulfs, and wherein many of the tallest philosophers have been drowned, while none of them ever got over to the science they had in view.

Bolingbroke. Fragments of Essays, § 65.

Nor yet the mariner,—his blood inflam'd
With acrid salts; his very heart athirst
To gaze at Nature in her green aray
Upon the ship's tall side he stands, possess'd
With visions prompted by intense desire.

TALLOW, n. } Dut. Talgh, talch; Ger. Talg; TALLOW, v. } Sw. Talg, which Wachter derives from the Welsh Deillian, fluere, manare, to flow. It is more probably from the A. S. verb Tely-an, illinere, to smear; and from which verb
Wachter himself derives the noun Talc.

Grease, suet, fat—of animals; mixture of fat substances (manufactured for candles.)

And then they couer the sayd chest or little house with black felt rubbed ouer with tallow or sheeps milke to keepe the raine from soaking through.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 95.

The commodities thereof are hides, and tallowe, and corne in great plenty, and some waxe, but not so plentifull as in other places.—Id. Ib. p. 237.

A certain Gall who standing before the town gate, re-ceiued by hand balles of taloue and pitch, and threwe them into the fier directly against the turret, was strycken through the ryght side with the quarrell of a crossebow, and fell down dead.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 193.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 515.

Many thousands [black-cattle] at a time are slaughtered every year by the hunters, only for their hides and tallow.

Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 6.

Having thus ript off all our worm-eaten plank, and clapt on new, by the beginning of December 1686, our ship's bottom was sheathed and tallowed.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

TALLY, n. } Fr. Taille, taillier, to cut, to TALLY, v. } notch; It. Tagliare; Sp. Tallar, TALLIER, n. } from the Lat. Talea, a green branch, (cut from a tree,) from Θαλλια, a green branch; θαλλ-ειν, virere. See Menage, Vossius, &c.

Any thing cut or notched; a piece of wood scored or notched,—to keep count or reckoning;
a reckoning or account: and, as similar pieces of wood, and reckonings upon them were kept by the parties to the account—a tally is also,—
Any thing that agrees with, or matches, another;
and to tally—

To agree with, to match, to fit, to suit, to correspond.

Calwagh burnt all the rolles and talies concerning the records & accompts of that countie.

Holinshead. Chronycles of Ireland, an. 1294.

Civill law teacheth, that long custome prescribeth; divinity, that old things are passed. Moral philosophy, that

Bp. Hall. Holy Observations, § 50.

TAM

Lord, I confesse to my shame thou art a great loser by me; for, besides my not improving of thy favors, I have not kept even-reckonings with thee; I have not justly tallied up thy inestimable benefits.

Bp. Hall. Breathings of the Devout Soul, § 4.

Cler. I then came from confession,
And 'twas enjoy'd me three hours for a penance,
To be a peaceable man, and to talk like one,
But now, all else being pardon'd, I begin
On a new tally.

Beaum. & Fletch. The little French Lawyer, Act i.

If being made free of a holy confraternity, or visiting altars and shrines, or numbering prayers, like faggots, by a tally of beads; if these or any of these will but secure us of heaven, and from going to hell, we shall think them a thousand times more tolerable and easy than to submit our wills to God in all the instances of true piety and virtue.

Scott. Christian Life, b. ii. c. 5.

Then the mention of the sacrament, as taken in the Antelucan meetings, tallies exactly with Tertullian's account of the Eucharist.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 32.

The basset-table spread, the tallier come;
Why stays Smilinda in the dressing room?
Rise, pensive nymph; the tallier waits for you.

Pope. The Basset-Table.

In 1696, tallies had been at forty, and fifty, and sixty per cent. discount, and bank notes at twenty per cent.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 2.

TALMUD.

TALMUDIST.

TALMUDISTICK.

Under their proper heads he (Rabbi Judah) methodically digested all that hitherto had been delivered to them of their law and religion by the tradition of their ancestors. And this is the book called the Mishnah. It became the subject of the studies of all the learned men; and the chiefest of them both in Judea and Babylonia employed themselves to make comments on it. These comments they call the Gemara; i. e. the Complement. The Mishnah is the text; and the Gemara, the comment; both together, they call the Talmud. (Prideaux, vol. ii. pt. i. b. v. p. 469.)

The Jewish Talmudists take upon them to determine how God spends his whole time, sometimes playing with leviathan, sometime over-seeing the world, &c. like Lucian's Jupiter.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 257.

We may therefore suppose, that they did not mean to include this article among the precepts of Adam, though an inconsistency never stopped the talmudists.

Bolingbroke. Fragments of Essays, § 5.

The talmudistick mysteries with which the learned Jews had infected this science.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. iii. p. 478.

TALON. Fr. Talon; It. Tallone; Sp. Talon, the heel; from the Lat. Talus, the pasterne bone, (Plinie, lib. xi. c. 46.) The etymology of the Lat. Talus is not satisfactorily accounted for.

Talon is—

The claw, or clawing, bony, or horny substance, affixed to the feet of animals.

It was formerly written Talant; and Lye refers to the margin of the Bible (Jer. c. 12.) for tallented, furnished with talants or talons.

And on an other day as he came from the high capitoll, for to haue gone out of the gate Salarie, he sawe two kytes ioyngnyng together with their talantes; and so fell downe dead at the emperours feete.—Golden Boke, c. 28.

Is it not a very absurd thing, that ye should reprove and blame nature, for that she hath not set unto your bodies any stings or pricks, nor given you tusks and teeth to revenge your selves with, nor yet armed you with hooked claws and tallons to offend your enemies.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 466.

"How can I tell but that his talants may Yet scratch my sonne, or rend his tender hand?"

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Better's that place, though homely and obscure,
Where we repose in safety and secure,
Than where great birds with lordly talons seize
Not what they ought, but what their fancies please.

Drayton. The Owl.

Jove's bird on sounding pinions beat the skies;
A bleeding serpent of enormous size,
His talons truss'd; alive, and curling round,
He stung the bird, whose throat receiv'd the wound.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

TAMARIND. Fr. Tamarind, a small, soft, dark, red Indian date, of a laxative property, and a good purger of the heat of choler, (Cotgrave.) It. Tamarindo; Sp. Tamarindo. Menage calls it an Indian word, and Mr. Thomson composes it of Tamar Hindee, the Indian date.

Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.

Thomson. Summer.

TAMARISK. Fr. Tamaris; It. Tamarisco; Sp. Tamaris; Lat. Tamarix. Cotgrave calls it—
A shrub or small tree, red-barked, and leaved like heath.

Tamarisk hath not more affinity in sound with tamarind, then sympathy in extraction, (both originally Arabick,) general similitude in leaves and operation; onely tamarind in England is an annual (dying at the approach of winter) whilst tamarisk lasteth many years.

Fuller. Worthies. Middlesex.

Then on the shore, the worthy hid, and left his horrid lance Amids the tamarisks; the sprite-like did with his sword advance

Vp to the river.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

This said, the spoils with dropping gore defac'd,
High on a spreading tamarisk he plac'd.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

The women are but little punctured; red and white paint is an ornament with them, as also with the men; the former is made of tamaric, but what composes the latter I know not.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 8.

TAMBOUR. See TABOUR. Tambour is also applied to a frame shaped like a drum, upon which to work embroidery; also to the embroidery itself; to other things from their shape.

Even then as if he [the flatterer] went about in some great pasture to make toward one beast, whom he purposeth to tame and bring to hand, by little and little joyning close unto him.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 72.

King. Away, I do not like this:

I'll make you tamer, or I'll dispossess you

Both of life and spirit: for this time

I pardon your wild speech.

Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act i.

He that is cold and tame in his prayers, hath not tasted of the deliciousness of religion, and the goodness of God; he is a stranger to the secrets of the kingdom, and therefore he does not know, what it is either to have hunger or satiety.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong flight, and easily tameable; divers of which may be so brought up as to joyn together in carrying the weight of a man.

Wilkins. Dædalus, c. 7.

And if we can have fondnesses for things indifferent or dangerous, our prayers upbraid our spirits when we beg coldly and *tame*ly for those things for which we ought to die, which are more precious than the globes of kings, and weightier than imperial scepters.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 5.

The tamelesse steed could well his waggon field,

Through downes and dales of the uneven field.

Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 1.

For these pleasures, and this delicate life, contrary to their nature, in tract of time causeth them to be soft and weak, receiving that degeneration (as it were) and effeminate habit of their courage, which folk call tameness, and indeed but baseness and defect of their natural generosity.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 465.

This we may undoubtedly gather and conjecture by his great diligence which he employed in that musick and harmony which he inferred for the dulcing, taming, and appeasing of the soule.—Id. Ib. p. 54.

TAMPER, v.

TAMPERING, n.

Seems to mean,—to try or make trial or experiment upon the temper or disposition, the will or inclination; the frame or constitution; to practice upon it; to act or practise empirically.

Because he found the council of Chalcedon corrupted, he suspected also the Ephesine, and another might have suspected more, for the Nicene was tampered foully with.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 6.

Parsons, who was constituted superiour, being a man of a seditious and turbulent spirit, and armed with a confident boldness, tampered with the Papists about deposing the queen.—Camden. The History of Queen Elizabeth, an. 1580.

TAN

Jac. And now I'll tell you why, before I beat ye,
You have been tampering any time these three days,
Thus to disgrace me.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iv. sc. 2.

The reason given for it, was this, Lest the hereticks may have occasion given them to insult; which they could not do, unless they had taken their adversaries in their tampering.—Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. §. 6.

Therefore he [Bp. Williams] bestirs himself amain, and though by order of the justices at the public session at Lincoln, Pregian was charged as the reputed father, the bishop by his agents, Powel and Owen, procured that order to be suppressed, and by subornation, and menacing of, and tampering with witnesses, did at length, in May 10, Car. I. procure the child to be fathered upon one Bohun, and Pregian to be acquitted.—Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. i.

Nothing moves,
Or nothing much, his constancy in ill;
Vain tampering has but foster'd his disease;
'Tis desperate, and he sleeps the sleep of death.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

Metamorphosed by the tampering of unskilful or dishonest politicians, and the craft of interested priests, cooperating with politicians,—man at present appears, in many countries, a diminutive and distorted animal, compared with what he was in his primeval state.—Knox. The Spirit of Despotism.

By the 13th and 14th of Charles ii. chap. 7, the exportation, not only of raw hides, but of tanned leather, except in the shape of boots, shoes, or slippers, was prohibited; and the law gave a monopoly to our boot-makers and shoe-makers, not only against our graziers, but against our tanners.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 8.

TANG, n. } Either (says Skinner) from the TANG, v. } Dut. Tanghe, acer, acris, sharp, keen, or from the Lat. Tang-ere, to touch;—it has got a touch. Cudworth writes it tange, and it is perhaps merely tinge, (by change of i into a;) applied more commonly to—the taste; generally, to—sense or feeling.

Taste or touch, savour, flavour, relish; tone or tune; sound.

But none of vs car'd for Kate.

tricke of singularity.—Id. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 5.

In a word, as it is said of the best oyl that it hath no tast, that is, no tang, but the natural gust of oyl therein; so I have indeavoured to present these battels according to plain historical truth, without any partial reflections.

Fuller. Worthies. England.

But the periods of divine providence, here in this world,
are commonly longer, and the evolutions thereof slower;

And now we see plainly, that the ancient atheists were of the very same mind with these in our days, that body, or that which is tangible and divisible, is the only substantial thing.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 769.

I think, it is not possible for any one to imagine any other qualities in bodies, howsoever constituted, whereby they can be taken notice of, besides sounds, tastes, smells, visible and tangible qualities.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 2.

By this sense the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned;
as hard, soft, smooth, rough, dry, wet, clammy, and the like.—Id. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

Tangibility and impenetrability, were elsewhere made by him the very essence of body.

TA'NKARD. } The French refer to Rabelais as their early authority; and he (as Skinner thinks,) may have received it from us. Duchat suggests that we may have formed the word by corruption, from Tin-quart. Thomson returns it to the
Fr. Etain, tin, and quart.

A tankard contains a quart. A tank is unlimited as to the quantity it may contain; and Thomson derives it from the Fr. Etang, a great pond, pool, or standing water. Lat. Stagnum.

The Liquid pitch or tarre throughout all Europe is boiled out of the torch tree: and this kind of pitch serveth to calke ships withall, and for many other uses. Now the manner of drawing tarre out of this tree, is, to cut the wood thereof into peeces, and when they are piled up hollow into an heape, to make a great fire within, as it were under a furnace, being claied without-forth: thus with the heat of the fire it doth

And speaking thicke (which Nature made his blemish)
Became the accents of the valiant.
For those that could speake low, and tardily,
Would turne their owne perfection, to abuse,
To seeme like him.—Id. 2 Pt Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

And that indeed it is but a slow and tardigradous animal,
preying upon advantage, and otherwise may be escaped.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 28.

Our explication includes time in the notions of velocity and tardity.—Digby. Pre-existence of Souls.

Confus'd, unnerv'd in Hector's presence grown,
Amaz'd he stood, with terrours not his own.
O'er his broad back his moony shield he threw,
And, glaring round, with tardy steps withdrew.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Yet, flying from his quiet, thither crowds
Each greedy wretch for tardy-rising wealth,
Which comes too late.—Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

His tardiness of execution exposes him to the encroachments of those who catch a hint and fall to work.
Idler, No. 1.

The tardiness of his [the sloth] pace seems to have reference to the capacity of his organs, and to his propensities with respect to food; i. e. is calculated to counteract the effects of repletion.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

TARE. From the Dut. Teren, teeren; Ger.
Zehren, absumere, because it destroys the corn;

Some patterns yet like tarnish'd lace, are worn,
And now disguise what once they did adorn.
Fuller. Memoirs. To the Reader & Writer of Lives.

How long wilt thou the general joy detain,
Starve and defraud the people of thy reign;
Content ingloriously to pass thy days
Like one of Virtue's fools, that feed on praise;
Till thy fresh glories, which now shine so bright,
Grow stale, and tarnish with our daily sight?
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

So far as they either want any thing of original exactness, or have lost any of their first freshness, and are, as it were, faded or tarnished by time; so far are they obscure.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 29.

Persecution for opinions, stuck the fastest; and after having tarnished the splendor of almost every Protestant community in its turn, was the latest, and with most difficulty, shaken off.—Warburton, vol. x. Ser. 20.

TASK, n. } Fr. Tasche; Dut. Tasche, tackse.
TASK, v. } The etymologists look very widely.
TA'SKER. } Fabyan and Kilian so write (i.e. taske) the word tax; and it is not improbable that they are the same word.

A task seems to be a tax,—any imposition; any thing imposed, or undertaken to be done; any thing exacted or required to be done; a rated or apportioned work or labour.

In fere wherof, Canutus, his son, after that he was kyng, closed in the lande of that holy martyr with a depe dyche, and graunted to the inhabytauntes therof great fredam, and quyrt theym of al kyngly taske or tribute.
 Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 200.

But at lengthe they greued or displeasyd the kyng in suche wyse, that he was fayne to sette a taske thorough his lande to oppresse theyr malyce.—Id. ib. an. 1207.

How much happier were the world if those eager task- masters, whose eyes are so curious and sharp in discerning what should be done by many, and what by few, were all changed into painful doers of that which every good Christian ought either only or chiefly to do.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii. § 14.

Hear me [great Pompey]
 If thy great spirit can hear, I must task thee:
 Thou hast most unnobly rob'd me of my victory,
 My love, and mercy.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The False One, Act ii. sc. 1.

Bold is the task, when subjects, grown too wise,
 Instruct a monarch where his error lies;
 For though we deem the short-liv'd fury past,
 'Tis sure the mighty will revenge at last.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Hear, ye sullen powers below;
 Hear, ye taskers of the dead.—Dryden & Lee.

Dare to be wise; begin; for, once begun,
 Your task is easy; half the work is done.

Francis. Horace, b. i. Epis. 2.

And, worse than all, and most to be deplor'd,
 As human nature's broadest, foulest blot,
 Chains him, and tasks him, and exacts his sweat
 With stripes, that Mercy with a bleeding heart
 Weeps, when she sees inflicted on a beast.

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Let it ever be in our thoughts that sin is the severest task-master we can serve; and that its wages in the end are certainly death.—Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 3.

TA'SSEL. } The Low. Lat. Tasselli are so TA'SSELED. } called, diminutively, from the Fr.
TA'SSES. } Tasse; and are tufts or knots wrought of interwoven gold and silk, hanging from the corners of the dress, and so placed and formed as to be a protection or armour for the thigh, (Vossius, De Vit. lib. ii. c. 18.) They are not now so confined either in materials or situation.

And purtraid in the ribanings

 Tasseled with silk, and perled with latoun.

Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3251.

In sommer they goe often with kerchieffes of fine white lawne, or cambricke, fastned vnder the chinne, with two long tassels pendent.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 497.

They were mighty made men, and carried marvellous bright targets of steel before them, their legs were armed with greaves, and their thighs with tases, their coats were black, and marched shaking heavy halberds upon their shoulders.—North. Plutarch, p. 212.

Then tooke that squire an horne of bugle small,
 Which hong adowne his side in twisted gold
 And tasselles gay.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

Pas. And smile, and wave a chair with comely grace too,
 Play with our tastle gently, and do fine things,
 That catch a lady sooner than a virtue.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Nice Valour, Act ii.

As woodbine weds the plant within her reach,
 Rough elm, or smooth-grain'd ash, or glossy beech,
 In spiral rings ascends the trunk, and lays
 Her golden tassels on the leafy sprays.

Cowper. Retirement.

I have known one pass for a man of great learning and a critic by dint of a pair of spectacles, and a gold headed cane, with a silk string and tassels.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 55.

Till gowns at length are found mere masquerade,
 The tassell'd cap and the spruce band a jest,
 A mock'ry of the world!

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

 In that rare life of her, and love?

Crashaw. The Flaming Heart.

— And as aged men are glad,
 Being tasteless grown, to joy in joys they had;
 So now the sick-starr'd world must feed upon
 This joy, that we had her, who now is gone.

Donne. A Funeral Elegy.

The organ of taste is the tongue and palate: bodies that emit light, sounds, and smells, are seen, heard, and smelt at a distance; but bodies are not tasted, but by immediate application to the organ; for till our meat touch our tongues or palates, we taste it not, how near soever it be.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

The trees around them all their fruit produce;
 Lotos, the name; divine, nectareous juice!
 (Thence call'd Lotophagi) which who so tastes, Insatiate riots in the sweet repasts,
 Nor other home, nor other care intends,
 But quits his house, his country, and his friends.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

Their distilled oils are fluid, volatile, and tastable.—Boyle.

Shall man presume to be my master,
 Who's but my caterer and taster?—Swift, Riddle 4.

It is not our office to be tasters, to be dressers, to be masters of the sports to all men: we in such matters would please our own fancie, and therefore we should not about them offend others.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 21.

Few can with me in dextrous works contend,
 The pyre to build, the stubborn oak to rend;
 To turn the tasteful viand o'er the flame,
 Or foam the goblet with a purple stream.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

"Ah! what avail the largest gifts of Heaven,
 When drooping healths and spirits go amiss?
 How tasteless then whatever can be given?"

Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

They would not swallow a drop either of wine or spirits:
 they put the glass to their lips, but having tasted the liquor,
 they returned it, with strong expressions of disgust.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 3.

Bound in thy adamant chain,
 The proud are taught to taste of pain,
 And purple tyrants vainly groan
 With pangs unfelt before, unpitied, and alone.

Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

I cannot think thee yet so dull of heart
 And spiritless, as never to regret Sweets tasted here, and left as soon as known.

Cowper. Task, b. i.

— His tasteful mind enjoys Alike the complicated charms, which glow
 Thro' the wide landscape.

Cooper. The Power of Harmony, b. ii.

They who must always have somewhat extremely delicious to fill up their hours, reject as flat and tasteless a number of things, with which others are very well entertained.

Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Nor am [I] inclined to lessen the number of the few friends whom time has left me, by obstructing that happiness which I cannot partake, and venting my vexations in censures of the forwardness and indiscretion of girls, or the inconstancy, tastelessness, and perfidy of men.

Rambler, No. 119.

TATCH, } Fr. Tache, tacher, a spot, stain,
TAICH, or } or blemish; a spot or mark of dis-TACH. } grace. Probably—

A touch; a contagious or infectious touch, a stain. See the quotations from Elyot. In the Merchant's Second Tale, a taich seems to be—

A touch of knavery or cunning; a trick, a contrivance or plot.

Fawnus oppon a dey, when Beryn came at eve,
 Was set oppon a purpose to make his sone leve
 Ali his shrewd taichis wyth goodnes if he myght.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

More ouer, to the nouryse shuld be appoynted an other womanne, of approued vertue, dyscretion, and grautie, who shal not suffre in the childes presence to be shewed any acte or tache dyshoneste, or any wantō or vnclene worde to be spoken.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 3.

Wherefore not onely princis, but also all other chyl dren, from theyr nurises pappes, are to be kepte diligently from the heryng or seinge of any vise or yuell tache.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 3.

Yet he thought good, not to neglect the punctual direc tions for the taches, snuffers, snuff-dishes, besoms, and the meanest requisites of that sacred fabric.
Bp. Hall. Ser. 1 Cor. xi. 10.

TAT'TER, v. } A. S. To-tæran, lacerare, di-TAT'TER, n. } lacerare, dilaniare, to tear, to rent, to pull in pieces, (Somner.) Also written To-teran. Tatter seems merely the reduplication tear tear, as tattle, tell tell.

To tear in pieces, into rags; to rend into strips or small pieces.

Not squemishly, frowningly or skornefully shunning the ragged and tattered sleeve of any suppliant, holding vp to him a simple soiled bill of complaint or petition.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 8.

For they were so poore and ragged, that they had scarce
 anie tatters to couer.
Holinshed. Chronicles. Hen. III. an. 1218.

— And, to that their faces
 Most foule and filthie were, their garments yet,
 Being all rag'd and tatter'd, their disgraces
 Did much the more augment, and made more ugly cases.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

Jac. He looks indeed like an old tatter'd colours,
 That every wind would borrow from the staff.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii.

L. Wish. Fripper! superannuated frippery! I'll frippery the villain; I'll reduce him to frippery and rags. A tatter- demallion—I hope to see him hung with tatters, like a Long-lane pent-house, or a gibbet thief.
Congreve. The Way of the World, Act iii.

Scornful he spoke, and o'er his shoulder flung
 The broad-patch'd scrip; the scrip in tatters hung Ill-join'd, and knotted to a twisted thong.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

For their arms, ammunition, and every conveniency, they were masters of, except the tattered habits they had on, were all carried away in the barge.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 3.

Cel. Some comerates of mine that call me to play;—
 Pox on 'em they'll spoil all—Flor. Pray let's see 'em.
Cel. Hang 'em tatterdemallions, they are not worth your Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Nay, do not laugh, for I mean honestly,
 How these young things tattle, when they get a toy by th end.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act iii.

But you must be tittle-tatling before all our guests?
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

"Why, what then, Goody Two-shoes, what if it be?
 Hold you, if you can, your tittle-tattle," quoth he.
Cotton. A Voyage to Ireland, c. 2.

And withall they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house: and not onely idle, but tatters also, and busie-bodies, speaking things which they ought not.
Bible. 1 Timothe, v. 13.

A fool cannot be relied upon for council; nor a vicious person for the advantages of vertue, nor a begger for relief, nor a stranger for conduct, nor a tatter to keep a secret.—Bp. Taylor. A Discourse of Friendship, p. 38.

If you will not excuse it, by the tatling quality of age, which, as Sir William Davenant says, is always narrative;
 yet I hope the usefulness of what I have to say on this subject will qualify the remoteness of it.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

Our Don who knew this tittle-tattle
 Did, sure as trumpet, call to battle,
 Thought it extremely a propos,
 To ward against the coming blow.
Prior. Paulo Purganti & his Wife.

From which, meanwhile, disputes of ev'ry size,
 That is to say, misunderstandings, rise;
 The springs of ill, from bick'ring, up to battle,
 From wars and tumults, down to tittle-tattle.
Byrom. The Three Black Crows.

TATTO'O. Thomson says, is a beat of drum ordering the tap-to or shut, and the soldiers to their quarters: others think it tapotez-tous;
 Beat (or tap) all.

All those, whose hearts are loose and low,
 Start, if they hear but the tattoo.—Prior. Alma, b. i.

A young lady cannot be married, but all the impertinents in town must be beating the tattoo from one quarter of the town to the other, to show they know what passes.
Tatler, No. 109.

TATTOW. See the first quotation from Cook.

They have a custom of staining their bodies, nearly in the same manner as is practised in many other parts of the world, which they call tattowing. They prick the skin so as just not to fetch blood, with a small instrument, something in the form of a hoe.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 17.

We were struck with the similitude between these marks, and those made by tattowing in the South Sea islands, and upon inquiring into its origin, we learnt that it had been practised by the natives long before any Europeans came among them.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9.

TA'VERN. } Fr. Taverne; It. Taverna;
TA'VERNER. } Sp. Taberna; Lat. Taberna; TA'VERNING, n. } contracted from tabulerna, and this from tabula, a table. See TABLE.

Any building formed ex tabulis, a shed, a shop.
 A tavern generally is—

An inn where provisions, victuals, liquors, &c. are supplied.

And fro thenns whanne britheren hadden herd thei camen to us to the cheping of Appius, and to the three tauernys.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 28.

And from thence, when ye brethre hearde of vs, they came against vs to Apiphorum, and to ye thre tauernes.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

In Flandres whilom was a compaignie
 Of yonge folk, that haunteden folie,
 As hasard, riot, stewes, and tavernes.
Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12,397.

And up they stert al dronken in this rage,
 And forth they gon towards that village,
 Of which the taverner had spoke befor,
 And many a grisly oth than have they sworn.
Id. Ib. v. 12,640.

And they had tauernes, as plentyous with wyne as though they had bene in Brussels.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 303.

But who conjur'd this bawdie Poggie's ghost,
 From out the stewes of his lewde home bred coast:
 Or wicked Rablais, dronken revellings,
 To grace the mis-rule of our tavernings?
Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 1.

But this and such casts were derived by hucksters, vintners, and taverners, after the wines were laid up in their cellars.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 1.

He [Epaminondas] refused at the instant sute of Pelopidas, to deliver out of prison a certaine tavernor, and within a while after, let the same party go at liberty at the request of his lemmon, or harlot, whom he loved.—Id. Plut. p. 297.

At Rome 'tis worse; where house-rent by the year,
 And servants' bellies, cost so devilish dear;
 And tavern-bills run high for hungry cheer.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 5.

TAUGHT. i. e. Tight.
 Fast, firm, stable, stiff. It is the common word with seamen.

Taught, the roide of the French, and dicht of the Dutch sailors, implies the state of being extended, or stretched out.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 2. Note 14.

TAUNT, v. } Fr. Tanser, to chide, rebuke,
TAUNT, n. } check, taunt, reprove, take up.
TA'UNTING, n. } (Cotgrave.) (See TANSER and TA'UNTINGLY. } TENSER, in Menage); perhaps from tenter, to tempt to anger, to provoke.

To charge, impute, or insinuate any thing pro-vokingly, insultingly, scoffingly; upbraidingly.
 To provoke, to insult, to upbraid.

I toke no hede to tauntes nor toys
 As leef to see them frowne as smyle,
 Where fortune laught I scornde their ioyes
 I found their fraudes and euery wyle.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Lower that once disdained, &c.

For a proper wit had she, & could both rede wel & write, mery in cōpany, redy & quick of aūswer, neither mute nor ful of bable, sometime taunting wthoute displeasure & not wt out disport.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 57.

Then as he was turning certain leaves thereof, Hooper began again to speak: but the bishop, turning himself towards him, tauntingly said, put up your pipes, you have spoken for your part.
State Trials. 3 Edw. VI. 1550. Bp. Bonner.

And yet al the while there was in him no pride ne haulte-nesse, there was in him no malapertnesse of cocking or geuing tauntes, there was in him no manier boasting or vaunting of himself, whiche vices are not wont to lack in boyes whose wittes are ripe before their time.
Udal. Erasmus. Luke, c. 2.

For there be monstrous, and many mocks, reproches, skoffes, and taunts of certaine men against vs poore islanders dwelling in the vtmost parts of the world.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 569.

Whiche liberall taunte that most gentyl emperour toke in so good pt, that he oftētimes reherced that sentēce to other, for a wyse and discrete cōsayle.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 5.

For I suppose thei would haue taunted them with such like words, you folish mē.—Caluine. Foure Sermons, Ser. 1.

Over and besides; true it is that a man of government may otherwhiles give a taunt and nipping scoffe, he may cast out also a merry jest to move laughter, and namely, if it be to rebuke, chastise.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 291.

For she's as wanton as a kid to th' out side,
 As full of mocks and taunts.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act iv. sc. 1.

In March following he [John Davies] was tried among other conspirators for his life, and being in a manner convicted by his own conscience and confession, held his peace; and then being taunted by the way that he was a papist, he denied not, but that in Oxon he was instructed in the Romish religion by his tutor, and confirmed in the same by Sir Christoph. Blount, one of the conspirators, while he was in the Irish wars.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

With ireful taunts each other they oppose,
 Till in loud tumult all the Greeks arose.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

The wanton goddess view'd the warlike maid
 From head to foot, and tauntingly she said,
 "Yield, sister; rival, yield."—Prior. Pallas & Venus.

The shameless fair, to taunting ever prone,
 No more the venom of her tongue suppress'd,
 But gave full vent to many a scornful jest.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xx.

So, after piercing taunts and vengeful words,
 The mighty warriors drew their shining swords.
Id. Ib. b. ii.

TAURICORNOUS. Having the horns (cor- nua) of a bull (tauri).

And if (as Vossius well contendeth) Moses and Bacchus were the same person, their descriptions must be relative, or the tauricornous picture of one, perhaps the same with the other.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 9.

TAUTOLOGY. } Gr. Ταυτολογία, the same TAUTOLOGIZE, v. } words, or words of the TAUTOLOGICAL. } same signification.
TAUTOLOGOUS. } A repetition or repeated use of the same words or words of the same or equivalent significatio. See the quotation from Warburton.

Both proverbs are applicable to such who grate the ears of their auditors with ungratefull tautologies, of what is worthlesse in it self.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

Our long-tongued chatterers do after a sort wound and weary the ears of their hearers by their tautologies and vain repetitions of the same things.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 161.

My rooms are not enlined with tapestry;
 But ragged walls, where a few books may lie.
 I slight the silks, whose ruffling whispers pride,
 And all the world's tautologies beside.
Broome. To Mr. J. B.

Unless we will grant, either two several raptures of the apostle, or an unnecessary and tautological repetition of one.
Bp. Hall. Revelation Unrevealed, § 22.

That in this brief description the wise man should tauto- logize, is not to be supposed.
Smith. On Old Age, (1666,) p. 25.

His tautology also of indissoluble and individual is not to be imitated; especially since neither indissoluble nor individual hath aught to do in the exact definition.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Heywood and Shirley were but types of thee,
 Thou last great prophet of tautology!
Dryden. Mac-Flecknoe.

TAW

A repetition of this kind, made in different words, is called a pleonasm, but when in the same words (as it is in the text in question, if there be any repetition at all) it is then a tautology.—Warburton. On Occasional Reflections, Rem. 9.

I have been purposely tautologous, that by my indifferent application of the two words of and for—both to her disgust and to her love, the smallest opposition between these prepositions might be done away.—Tooke. Div. of Pur. pt. i. c. 9.

TAW, or } See TEW.
TEW.

TAW. The marble which boys use to shoot at others on the ground is so called, perhaps from the Dut. Touw, made, prepared; a marble made for this particular purpose. Dutch taws were formerly in high repute.

Augustus, indeed, had no play-fellows of his own begetting; but is said to have passed many of his hours with little Moorish boys at a game of marbles, not unlike our modern taw.—Tatler, No. 112.

To whip a top, to knuckle down at taw,
To swing upon a gate, to ride a straw.
Churchill. The Candidate.

We ought to be as backward in giving credit to reports of that kind as we should be in believing any body who told us he saw a group of persons of the highest dignity and most venerable character playing at taw together in the street, or robbing an orchard, or practising the little mischievous tricks of an unlucky school-boy.

Too fine or shewy; tastelessly fine or shewy.

Binde your fillets faste,
And gird in your waste,
For more fineness, with a tawdrie lace.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. April.

There was a kind of tawdriness in their habits.
Moral State of England, (1670,) p. 161.

Falsehood more leisurely undrest,
And laying by her taudry vest,
Trick'd herself out in Truth's array,
And cross the meadows tript away.
Prior. Truth & Falsehood.

A rabble of people, seeing her very oddly and tawdrily dressed, took her for a foreigner, and concluded she must be a certain great person's mistress.
Pulteney. To Swift, Dec. 21, 1736.

Hence those vile tricks which mar fair Nature's hue,
And bring the sober matron forth to view,
With all that artificial taudry glare,
Which Virtue scorns, and none but strumpets wear.
Churchill. The Prophecy of Famine.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 31.

The people of the countrey are of a good stature, tawny coloured, broad faced, flat nosed.—Id. Ib. p. 465.

And, more for ranck despight then for great paine,
Shakt his long locks colourd like copper-wyre,
And bitt his tawny beard to shew his raging yre.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

But the very best [Misselto] is that which has no husk or skin at all, which also is the smoothest: without forth of a light tawny or yellowish red.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 4.

Thus, in the centre of some gloomy wood,
With many a step the lioness surrounds
Her tawny young, beset by men and hounds.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

TA'XING, n. } sare, to tax. See TASK.

To tax is,—to rate or assess, to charge or impose a rate or assessment; and, generally, to charge, (sc. with a fault, an offence,) to impute, to accuse.

A tax, Dut. Taechse,—a rate or assessment;
charged or imposed; an import, a tribute. Probably,—so much taken, lifted or levied.

The lerid & the lay granted that thei said, & assigned a day, that taxe to be laid.
The dettes that men tham auht, ther stedes & ther wonyng
Wer taxed & bitauht to the eschete of the kyng.
R. Brunne, p. 247.

Wenne ge amercy eny man. let mercy be taxour.
Piers Plouhman, p. 130.

Florent, if I for the so shape,
That thou through me thy death escape,
And take worshippe of thy dede,
What shall I haue to my mede?
What thing (quod he) that thou wold axe,

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And thus the werres thei beginne,
Wherof the holy churche is taxed,
That in the point as it is axed,
The disme goth to the bataille,
As though Christe might not auaille
To do them right by other waie.—Id. Ib. Prol.

And ouer that eke foorth with all
He saith, that other haue shall
The double of that his felowe axeth,
And thus to them his grace he taxeth.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Yf the taxes and tallages were grete in Fraunce, in lykewyse they were in Englande, so that many a man sorowed longe after.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 55.

Fourthly, he prouideth that the people of the countrie haue neither armor nor money, being taxed & pilled so often as he thinketh good: without any meanes to shake off that yoke, or to relieue themselves.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 486.

Contrariwise, by others he [Murray] was taxed, as if he had taken religion for a cloak, that he might glut himself and his with the spoils of the church; and that, being most unreasonably ungratefull to the queen his sister, to whom he was so much engaged, he had unworthily insulted over her womanly weakness.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1570.

These ripe considerations moving us
(Having had your allowance on their worths)
Here we would call'em to our brotherhood;
If any therefore can their manners tax,
Their faith, their chastity, any part of life,
Let 'em speak now.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act i. sc. 3.
Flie far from hence
All private taxes, immodest phrases,
What e'r may but shew like vicious:
For wicked mirth never true pleasure brings,
But honest minds are pleas'd with honest things.
Id. The Knight of the Burning Pestle, Prol.

Besides, the people always granted subsidies chearfully; and though the taxation by that way of assesment seemed greater then in old time, yet was there no rough nor rigid manner of taxing it used.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1590.

For when the Commissioners entred into the taxation of the subsidie in Yorkeshire, and the Bishopricke of Duresme;
the people vpon a sudaine grew into great mutinie, and said openly, that they had indured of late yeares a thousand miseries, and neither could nor would pay the subsidie.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 67.

These rumors begot scandal against the king, taxing him for a great taxer of his people.—Id. Ib.

For the first of these I am a little to alter their name; for instead of takers, they become taxers; instead of taking provision for your majesty's service, they tax your people ad redimendam vexationem.
Id. A Speech touching Purveyors.

The taxing of living creatures by the poll, propounded first in Edward the sixth his reign, she would not suffer to be so much as once named.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1590.

What had become of me, if Virgil had taxed me with another book.—Dryden. Ded. to the Æneis.

He was not like those masters of philosophy, so frequently taxed and derided by the satyrists; who by a horrid garb, supercilious looks, and loud declamations, would seem to discountenance those vices which themselves practised.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

Eve is next examined. She confesses the truth of her husband's accusation; but she taxes the serpent as her seducer.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

Every tax must finally be paid from some one or other of those three different sorts of revenue, (i. e. rent, profit, or wages) or from all of them indifferently.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 2.

In the Venetian territory, all the arable lands which are given in lease to farmers are taxed at a tenth of the rent.
Id. Ib.

There are two different circumstances, which render the interest of money a much less proper subject of direct taxa- tion than the rent of land.—Id. Ib.

His own favourite governour was of opinion that the Americans were not then taxable objects.
Burke. On American Taxation.

Again and again, revert to your old principles—seek peace

TEA. Fr. Thé; It. Te; Chinese, Then. And see the quotation from Dampier.

There is great store of sugar made in this country, and tea in abundance is brought from thence; being much used there, and in Tunquin and Cochinchina as common drinking; women sitting in the streets, and selling dishes of tea hot and ready made; they call it chau, and even the poorest people sip it.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

At noon (the lady's matin hour)
I sip the tea's delicious flower.
Gay, Fable 8.

Tea, for example, was a drug very little used in Europe before the middle of the last century. At present the value of the tea annually imported by the English East-India Company, for the use of their own countrymen, amounts to more than a million and a half a year.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

— There the pitcher stands
A fragment, and the spoutless tea-pot there;
Sad witnesses how close-pent man regrets
The country, with what ardour he contrives
A peep at Nature, when he can no more.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Your own as well as my experience will furnish instances of those who have thought it a misfortune not to be able to shine at the tea table as well as in the schools.

For him these sorrows? for my mortal foe?—Id. Ib. b. ix.

If they understand not the evidence of religion, the more shame it is for them, but methinks it might very well become them to be modest and teachable till they do.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 3.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths, and to make a man swallow that for an innate principle, which may serve to his purpose who teacheth them.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

Even among us frail creatures, when we see a person teachable, and modest, and desirous of assistance, it is a great inducement to give it.—Gilpin, vol. iii. Ser. 21.

— In some are found

Such teachable and apprehensive parts,
That man's attainments in his own concerns,
Match'd with th' expertness of the brutes in theirs,
Are oftentimes vanquish'd and thrown far behind.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

called by some the Torch-tree, (Cotgrave.) Generally—
A torch.

The one his bowe and shafts, the other spring
A burning teade about his head did move,
As in their syres new love both triumphing.

Spenser. Muipolmos.

Bid her awake; for Hymen is awake,
And long since ready forth his maske to move,
With his bright tead that flames with many a flake,
And many a bachelor to waite on him,
In their fresh garments trim.—Id. Epithalamion.

TEAL. Dut. Teeligh, from Teel-en, gignere, procreare. A fowl, so called from its prolific nature, (Skinner.)

And near to them you see the lesser dibling teal
In bunches, with the first that fly from mere to mere,
As they above the rest were lords of earth and air.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

TEAM, n. } See To TEEM. A. S. Team, TEAM, v. } tyme, a yoke or teame of working cattle. Somner says—a litter of pigs was called a team. Lye also—a team of ducks; and hence supposes a team of oxen or horses to be so called, because following in succession;—it is the whole family; the whole number. See TEEM.

The number of horses, or other animals yoked to the same carriage.

Ac treuthe shal teche gow. hus teeme for to dryve.

Piers Ploughman, p. 135.

My Pyrocles, said she, with tearful eyes and a pitiful countenance, such as well witnessed she had no will to deny any thing she had power to perform.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

In stead of rest, she does lament, and weepe,
For the late losse of her deare-loved knight,
And sighes, and grones, and evermore does steepe
Her tender brest in bitter teares all night;
All night she thinks too long, and often lookes for light.

Many times (when the winter is very hard and extreeme)
the beares and woolfes issue by troupes out of the woods driven by hunger, and enter the villages, tearing and rauening all they can finde.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 476.

We are found alwale to be such as despise death, and yet abhorre to be tormented, choosing rather frankelie to open our minds than to yeeld our bodies vnto such seruile halings and tearings as are used in other countries.

Holinshead. Description of England, b. ii. c. 11.

Here ended Brutus sacred progeny,

First, because shee is as it were grafted and planted into that kinne, vnto which she shal beare children, and the which she shall multiply with her teeming.—Id. Ib. c. 13.

Add to this, that vice is pregnant and teeming, and brings forth new instances, numerous as the spawn of fishes.

Bp. Taylor. Of Original Sin, § 4.

"Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen."

Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

The teeming earth, yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd, did fruitful stores allow.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of dearth
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth.

Id. The Hind and the Panther.

Among the rude inhabitants of a cold country, neither any operations of art, or occurrence of accident, could be supposed so easily to produce fire by attrition, as in a climate where every thing is hot, dry, and adust, teeming with a latent fire which a slight degree of motion was sufficient to call forth.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

The liberty of the press is pregnant with advantage; but the licentiousness of it teems with evils which almost counter-balance them.—Knox. Ess. No. 6.

In his ninth and last book, having nothing left to wreak his teen upon, and to discharge his malicious and spiteful stomach, but only the Lacedemonians.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 1014.

But under simple shew, and semblant plaine,
Lurkt false Duesse secretly unseene,
As a chaste virgin that had wronged beene;
So had false Archimago her disguysd,
To cloke her guile with sorrow and sad teene.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Ne would she speake, ne see, ne yet be seene,
But hid her visage, and her head downe bent,
Either for grievous shame, or for great teene,
As if her hart with sorrow had transfixt beene.—Id. Ib.

And Chedder, for mere grief his teen he could not wreak,
Gush'd forth so forceful streams, that he was like to break
The greater banks of Ax.—Dragton. Poly-Olbion, s. 3.

The one of them, with all the advances which years have made upon her, goes on in a certain romantick road of love and friendship, which she fell into in her teens.
Tatler, No. 266.

When Cupid first instructs his darts to fly
From the sly corner of some cook-maid's eye,
The stripling raw, just enter'd in his teens,
Receives the wound, and wonders what it means.
Churchill. The Prophecy of Famine.

TE/GUMENT. Lat. Tegumentum, from tectum, past part. of teg-ere, to cover. See INTEGUMENT.
The covering; that which covers, enfolds, or enwraps.

[They] afterward clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beards and other hairy teguments.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 4.

How well adapted are the annuli of some reptiles, and the contortions of the skin of others, not only to fence the body sufficiently against outward injuries; but to enable them to creep, to perforate the earth, and in a word, to perform all the offices of their reptile state, much better than any other tegument of the body would do?
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 12.

The gardener would crush the insect, if it commenced the attack on the external tegument; but it carries on the work of destruction with efficacy and safety, while it corrodes the unseen fruit, and spares the outside shell.
Knox. Spirit of Despotism.

TEIL. Lat. Tilia, the linden or lime-tree.

From purple violets and the teile they bring Their gather'd sweets, and rifle all the spring.
Addison. Virgil, Georg. 4.

TEINE, n. Skinner thinks, a tiny piece of silver. Mr. Tyrwhitt,—a narrow thin plate of metal, perhaps from the Lat. Gr. Tania. There seems no reason to conclude it to have been a plate. May it not have been a tine, or piece in shape and size similar to a tine, (sc. of a harrow, fork?) See TINE, and TINY.

I say, he toke out of his owen sleve
A teine of silver (yvel mote he cheve)
Which that ne was but a just unce of weight,
And taketh heed now of his cursed sleight:
He shop his ingot, in length and in brede
Of thilke teine.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,692.

And in his sleve, as ye beforen hond
Herde me tell, he had a silver teine;
He slyly toke it out, this cursed heine,
(Unweeting this preest of his false craft)
And in the pannes botome he it laft.—Id. Ib. v. 16,785.

TEINT. See TINT.

TE/LARY. Lat. Tela, a web. Some editions of Brown read retary. See RETIARY.
Weaving, or spinning webs.

The picture of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 19.

TELEGRAPH. Mason says, is so called (from τελος, the end, and γραφειν, to write,) because it answers the end of writing by signals. Analogy seems to prefer τηλε, afar. See TELESCOPE.

The invention is ascribed to Chappe, and was first used in France about the year 1794, and within two years afterwards introduced into this country.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

I begin with Galilæo, the reputed author of the famous telescope; but indeed the glory of the first invention of that excellent tube belongs to Jacobus Mertius of Amsterdam; but 'twas improved by the noble Galilæo, and he first applied it to the stars.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

What success and informations we may expect from the advancements of this instrument, it would perhaps appear romantick and ridiculous to say; as, no doubt, to have talk'd of the spots in the sun, and vast inequalities in the surface of the moon, and those other telescopic certainties, before the invention of that glass, would have been thought phantastick and absurd.—Id. Ib.

He that takes away reason, to make way for revelation, puts out the light of both, and does much what the same as if he would persuade a man to put out his eyes, the better to receive the remote light of an invisible star by a telescope.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 19.

There are microscopical corpuscles in bodies, as there are telescopic stars in the heavens, neither of which can be discovered without the help of one or the other of these glasses.—Bolingbroke, Ess. 1. On Human Knowledge.

The whole passage of the planet Venus over the sun's disk was observed with great advantage by Mr. D. Green, Dr. Solander, and myself; Mr. Green's telescope and mine were of the same magnifying power, but that of Dr. Solander was greater.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 13.

And yet our lot is giv'n us in a land

Fr. Tempest, tempester; It. Tempèsta, tempestare; Sp. Tempestad; Lat. Tempestas; time, season, (from tempus), applied, emphatically, to times—described by Pliny—of foul weather.

Storms of hail, rain, wind; more especially of wind; generally, a storm, an uproar, tumult or disturbance.

Tempestively,—seasonably.
B. Jonson adopted the verb from the Fr. Tempester; he has been followed by Milton.

Here folc heo loren in the se thorg tempest monyon.
R. Gloucester, p. 50
So com a tempest wilde, his schip had alle ouer ronnen.
R. Brunne, p. 124.

Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 38. pt. i.

The one [sorts of accidents] wee call tempests, which comprehend hailes, stormes of wind and raine, and such like impressions of the aire.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 28.

Like as therefore much more perilous is the tempest at sea, which impeacheth and putteth back a ship, that it cannot come into the harbour to ride at anchor, than that which will not suffer it to get out of the haven, and make saile in open sea; even so those tempestuous passions of the soul are more dangerous which will not permit to be at rest, nor to settle his discourse of reason once troubled.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 258.

As when a windy tempest bloweth hye,
That nothing may withstand his stormy stowre,
The cloudes, as things affrayd, before him flye;
But, all so soone as his outrageous powre
Is layd, they fiercely then begin to showre.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

Where other princes, hoisted to their thrones
By Fortune's passionate and disorder'd power, Sit in their height, like clouds before the sun,
Hindring his comforts; and, by their excess
Of cold in virtue, and cross heat in vice,
Thunder and tempest on those learned heads,
Whom Cæsar with such honour doth advance.

For whereas [saith Hardinge] the shepe of Christe continewe to the worldes ende, he is not wise, that thinketh Christe to haue made a shepherde temporarie or for a time ouer his perpetual flocke.

Jewell. The Defence of the Apologie, p. 723.

I say not, as the common voyce doth say,
That all things which beneath the moone have being
Are temporell, and subiect to decay:
But I say rather, though not all agreeing
With some that weene the contrarie in thought,
That all this whole shall one day come to nought.

Spenser. The Ruines of Rome.

—This act

Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength
Defeating sin and death, his two maine armes,
And fix farr deeper in his head thir stings
Then temporell death shall bruise the victors heel
Or theirs whom he redeems.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. xii.

Thus it was also in the case of the Corinthians, that died a temporel death for their undecent circumstances in receiving the holy sacrament: Saint Paul who used it for an argument to threaten them into reverence, went no farther, nor pressed the argument to a sadder issue, than to die temporelly.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 27.

Thus we distinguish the laws of peace from the orders of war; those are perpetual, to distinguish from the temporality of these.—Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

The whole is subordinate to the whole, that is, all our temporalities are given us to serve God with; but they are given us also to serve our own needs that we may serve God.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 3.

Those things may cause a temporeaneous disunion.

Hallywell. Melampr. (1681), p. 68.

This ministry of imposition of hands for confirmation of baptized people is so far from being a temporeary grace, and to determine with the persons of the apostles, that it is a fundamental point of Christianity, an essential ingredient to its composition, Saint Paul is my author.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy asserted.

And the lords iustices being not prepared to stop the same, they did yet so temporise with them, as they gained time, till further order might be taken vpon aduertisement of hir maiesties pleasure herein.

Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1567.

It was not without suspicion that she [the Queen of Scots] did it to serve her turn, and to temporize, that she might either strengthen her title to England, or else give hope and courage to the papists in England, and to the Guises her kinsmen in France.

Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1562.

I say thou lyeest Camillo, and I hate thee,
Pronounce thee a grosse lowt, a mindlesse slaue,
Or else a houering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and euill, Inclining to them both.

Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

Thucydides in his story writeth: That during civil seditions and warres, men transferred the accustomed significations of words unto other things, for to justifie their deeds; for desperate rashnes without all reason, was reputed valour, and called love-friend; provident delay and temporizing, was taken for decent cowardise.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 76.

Almost the whole body of them are of opinion, that their infallible master has a right over kings, not only in spirituals but temporals.—Dryden. Religio Laici, Pref.

But does it with a gracious Godhead suit,
Whose mercy is his darling attribute,
To punish crimes that temporeary be,
And those but trivial offences too,
Mere slips of human nature, small and few,
With everlasting misery?

Pomfret. Divine Attributes. Justice.

These, and such like eminent persons, Almighty God, in his goodness, was pleased to raise up, to be, in their generations, as it were, partial and temporeary saviours, as by declaring his will, and revealing his truth to men, so by guiding them with a remarkable example.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

For this purpose a large space had been cleared, before the temporeary hut of this chief, near our post, as an area where the performances were to be exhibited.

Yet he allows, that suspicions and charges of temporization and compliance had somewhat sullied his reputation.
Johnson. Life of Ascham.

TEMPT, v. Fr. Tenter; It. Tentare; Sp. Tentar; Lat. Tentare, from tentum, (past part. of tenere, to hold or keep;) held, tried, examined.
TEMPTABLE. To try; to put to the trial, to the proof; to prove; to try the strength, the virtue,—by persuasion, by allurements, by enticement; to allure, to entice; to induce, to incite, to provoke.

Eft soone Jhesus seide to him, it is written thou shalt not tempt thi Lord God.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 4.

And Jesus sayde to hym, it is written also: Thou shalt not tempt thy Lorde God.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And the tempter came nigh & seide to him, yf thou art Godis Sone, seye that these stones be maad looves.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 4.

Then came to hi the tepter, & sayd: yf thou be ye sonne of God commaund yt these stones be made bread.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Wake ye and preie ye that ye entre not into temptacioun, for the spirit is redy and the flesch is syk.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 26.

Watch, and pray that ye fall not into temptacion. The spirite is wyllunge, but the fleshe is weake.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore, all the while that a man hath within him the peine of concupiscence, it is impossible, but he be tempted somtime, and moved in his flesh to sinne.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

But for to kepe us fro that cursed place,

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

I who e're while the happy garden sung,
By one man's disobedience lost, now sing
Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,
By one man's firm obedience fully tri'd
Through all temptation, and the tempter foil'd
In all his wiles, defeated and repuls'd,
And Eden rais'd in the wast wilderness.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Junius. Sin Stigmatised, (1639.) p. 38.

TEN. } A. S. Tyn, ten, tien; Dut. Tien;
TENTH. } Ger. Zehen; Sw. Tio. Wachter is inclined to derive the German, if not others, from the verb ziehen, to draw, quia denarius est tractus decem, unitatum; but the A. S. he prefers to derive from the obsolete tina, colligere. As ten is properly the collection of all the fingers, Tooke thinks, tyn, ten, is the past part. of the A. S. verb Tyn-an, to inclose, to encompass, to tyne. "It is," he observes, "in the highest degree probable, that all numeration was originally performed by the fingers, the actual resort of the ignorant: for the number of the fingers is still the utmost extent of numeration. The hands doubled, closed, shut in, include and conclude all number, and might therefore well be denominated tyn or ten." The A. S. Tyn-an, and the It. Tin-a, appear to be the same word. The Lat. Decem, Gr. Δεκα, has also been derived from δεχ-εσθαι, comprehendere, to comprehend, or comprise. See HUNDRED.

Tenure,—the holding; or the terms or conditions upon which the tenant holds or occupies.

Adelwolf of Westsex, after his fadere dede,
At Chestre sette his parlement, his tenantz therto bede.
R. Brunne, p. 19.

Freer, what charity is this, to be confessors of lords and ladies, and to other mighty men, and not amend hem in hir living? but rather as it seemeth, to be the bolder to pill her poore tenants and to liue in lechery.
Chaucer. Jack Upland.

Thei ben clerkes, and courts ovir se,
Ther pore tenaunce fully thei slite.

Chaucer. The Plowman's Tale.

He was hated of all men insomuche that his owne tenauntes, the men of Northumberlāde, of whiche prounee he than was lorde, arose agayne hym.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 214.

To apply the distinction to Colchester; all men beheld it as tenantable, full of faire houses; none as tenable in an hostile way, for any long time, against a great army.

Fuller. Worthies. Essex.

But some men will say unto me: that to be banished is a note of ignominy and reproach; true it is indeed, but among fooles only, who thinke likewise that it is a shame to be poore, to be bald, to be small of stature, yea, and to be a stranger, forsooth, a tenant, inmate, or alien inhabitant.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 230.

On which hypothesis, the witch's anointing herself before she takes her flight, may perhaps serve to keep the body tenantable, and in fit disposition to receive the spirit at its return.—Glanvill, Ess. 6.

How I foresee in many ages past,
When Lolioe's caytive name is quite defa'st,
Thine heyr, thine heyre's heyre, and his heire again,
From out the loynes of carefull Lolian,
Shall climbe up to the chancell pewes on high,
And rule and raigne in their rich tenancie.

Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 2.

Or have the Paræ, with impartiall knife,
Left some friends body tenantlesse of life,
And thou bemon'st that fate.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

We mistake our tenure: we take that for gift, which God intends for loane; we are tenants at will, and thinke our selves owners.—Bp. Hall, Epis. 9.

In this realme, and in other the like dominions, the tenure of lands is altogether grounded on militarie lawes, and held as in fee vnder princes which are not made heads of the people by force of voluntarie election, but borne the soueraigne lords of those whole and intyre territories.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 80.

As for tenures, I shall say that they [the Saxons] had not the name in use among them, yet (like the Jews, the Greeks, the Romans, and other ancient nations) a multitude of services, whereof some were personal, and some predial.

Spelman. Of Feuds & Tenures, c. 25.

Three acres more he converted into a highway, leading from Richmansworth to Watford; and so was commonly used; he the rest he tenanted out.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1530.

The thing holden therefore stiled a tenement, the possessions thereof tenants, and the manner of their possession a tenure.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 5.

The lands in America and the West-Indies, indeed, are in general not tenanted nor leased out to farmers.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

Their vanity is gratified in seeing the great and the rich at their table, especially when useful connexions may be made; and what signifies it, they think, if the wretches at home, the tenantry, whom nobody knows, starve and rot on the dunghills whence they originated.—Knox. Ess. No. 114.

To this species of tenancy succeeded, though by very slow degrees, farmers, properly so called, who cultivated the land with their own stock, paying a rent certain to the landlord.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 2.

ceed or advance, or make advancement or progress towards.

Beryn arose a morowe, and cried wondir fast,
And axid aftir clothis, but it was all in wast;
Ther was no man tendant for hym in all the house.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

Thus you partly see by comparing a climate to vs well knownen, and familiarly acquainted by like height of the sunne in both places, that vnder the equinoctiall in June is no excessive heat, but a temperate aire rather tending to cold.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 51.

The Indian Paracoussy drew neere to the French, and began to make him a long oration, which tended to no other end, but that he besought the Frenchmen very earnestly to come and see his dwelling.—Id. Ib. p. 322.

This deceptful propheme tented to this end, that if he had geuen sentence for the phariseis, then should he haue bene accused of the Herodians for an authour of rebellion, or insurreccion agaynst the emperour.—Udal. Marke, c. 12.

But whereas Buckhurst's officious diligence seemed to tend to the intrapping of Leicester, Leicester's displeasure against him and settled favour with the queen prevailed so far, that Buckhurst at his return was confined to his house for several months.

Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1587.

By your leave, Sir, I'll tend my master, and instantly be with you.—Beaum. & Fletcher. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act ii.

Cel. Methinks this open air's far better, tend ye that way.
Pray where's the woman came along?

Id. The Humorous Lieutenant, Act iii. sc. 4.

Unhappie wight, borne to disastrous end,
That doth his life in so long tendence spend!

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

But if at first the appetites, and necessities, and tendencies of the body, when it was at ease, and health, and blessed, did yet tempt the soul to forbidden instances, much more will this be done when the body is miserable and afflicted, uneasie and dying.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 7. § 1.

Whether ill tendment, or recurelesse paine,
Procure his death; the neighbours all complaine,
Th' unskilfull leech murdered his patient,
By poyson of some foule ingredient.

Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 4.

Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Jeoly had been sick for three months: in all which time
I tended him as carefully as if he had been my brother.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1691.

I will the action that tends one way, whilst my desire tends another, and that the direct contrary.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

His fields he tended, with successless care,
Early and late.—J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

You have before ye that which is the very top and flower of the heaven of a reasonable creature; who in this blessed state is fixed, as it were, in his own proper element, where, without any lett or disturbance, he freely moves and acts according to his most natural tendence and inclination.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 1.

The tendency of such pretences was to make Father and Son one hypostasis, or person, and was in reality to deny that there was any son at all.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 271.

Between three and four o'clock the tide of ebb began to make, and I sent the master to sound to the southward and southwestward, and in the mean time, as the ship tended,
I weighed anchor.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

My goats, secure from harm, small tendence need,
While high on yonder hanging rock they feed.

Philips, Past. 6.

This truth Philosophy, though eagle-ey'd
In nature's tendencies, oft overlooks.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

that somer is neare.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

"I have," quod she, "a soule for to kepe
As wel as ye, and also min honour,
And of my wihood thilke tendre flour."

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,062.

Alas! what wonder is it though she wept?
That shal be sent to straunge nation
Fro frendes, that so tendrelly hire kept.

Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4687.

This old Pandion, this king gan wepe
For tenderesse of herte, for to leve
His daughter gon, and for to yeve her leve,
Of this world he loved nothing so,
But at the last, leave hath she to go.—Id. Philomene.

whō he loued tenderly.—Udal. Marke, c. 12.

Suffer them to be led with this tenderesse ientely and swetely, vnto thynges of more perfeccion.—Id. Matt. c. 9.

Now haue we manie chimnies and yet our tenderlings
complaine of rheumes, catarhs, and poses.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 19.

The Novatians erred in the matter of repentance: the inducing cause of their error was an over-active zeal, and too wary a tenderness in avoiding scandal and judging concerning it.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 3.

Ye had better marry her to her grave a great deal:
There will be peace and rest, alas poor gentlewoman,
Must she become a nurse now in her tenderness?

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Night-Walker, Act i.

From either host, sires, sons, and brothers trace
The well-known features of some kindred face.
Then first their hearts with tenderness were struck,
First with remorse for civil rage they shook.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

If human woes her soft attention claim,
A tender sympathy pervades the frame,
She pours a sensibility divine
Along the nerve of ev'ry feeling line.

Cowper. Table Talk.

Oh! that in friendship we were thus to blame,
And ermin'd candour, tender of our fame,
Wou'd clothe the honest errour with an honest name!
Be we then still to those we hold most dear,
Fatherly fond, and tenderly severe.

Smart. The Horation Canons of Friendship.

Plants rais'd with tenderness are seldom strong;
Man's coltish disposition asks the thong;
And without discipline the fav'rite child,
Like a neglected forester, runs wild.

Cowper. Progress of Errour.

TE'NDER, v. } Formed upon the Fr. verb
TE'NDER, n. } Tendre, to tend, (qv.)
TE'NDRY. } To stretch or reach out, (to or before;) to propose, to present, to offer; to observe, to heed or care for, to guard, to regard.
Shakespeare uses the n. tender in this latter sig-nification, i.e. heed, regard.

For in her minde no thought there is,
But how she may be true, I wis:
And tenders thee, and all thy heale,
And wisheth both thy health and weale
And loues thee euen as far forth than
As any woman may a man.

Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer describing, &c.

But for Cadwan, after many meanes & requestes, myght knowe yf he wolde receyue you or nat, and for pytie som-what to tendre your nede and necessitye.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 231.

He sawe moreouer that his moste louyng subiectes of Englande (whome hys godly exauple had prouoked to tender and seeke the glory of God) did nowe houngre and thirste the righteousness of God, and the knowelage of hys woorde.—Udal. Erasmus, Pref.

Knowe yee, that hereupon we greatly tendring the wealth of our people and the encouragement of them and other our louyng subiects in their good enterprises for the aduancement of lawfull traffike to the benefite of our common wealth, haue of our speciall grace, &c.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 296.

Here was a sore ponnyshemete for so horryble a myschefe, but that they sumwhat tedered them selues in the same, as occupys in one arte.

Bale. English Notaries, pt. ii.

—Something is done,
That will distract me, that will make me mad,
If I behold thee: if thou tender'st me,
Let me not see thee.—Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act iii.

Lady. Alas, you need not. I make already tender of myself, and then you are forsworn.

Id. The Scornful Lady, Act v.

Twelve talents of the finest gold, all which Vlysses weyd,
And carried first, and after him, the other youths conveyd
The other presents; tendred all, in face of all the court.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xix.

Thou hast shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life
In this faire rescue thou hast brought to mee.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 4.

3. That this his meditation proceeds upon certain terms and stipulations between God and men, which he obtained of God for us, and in his name hath published and tendered to us.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

His tendering upon so fair and easy terms an endless life in perfect joy and bliss; his furnishing us with so plentiful means and powerful aids for attaining that happy state—how pregnant demonstrations are these of unspeakable goodness toward us!—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

We may by our charity and benignity to those whose good he tenders, yield (though not an adequate, yet) an acceptable return to his benefits.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 8.

The lives of our souls being in God's free disposal, he had an undoubted right to exchange them with Christ's for his life, upon the free tendry which he made of it.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Bestowing on the priest and victim the most acceptable retribution that he could possibly receive, the right of pardoning, reforming and making eternally happy, as many as should throw themselves on the mercy thus tendered them, and prove the sincerity of their thankful faith, by that of their obedience.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 19.

TE'NDERS. i. e. attenders,—a (small) ship, attending on another (a large one.)

We were now 640 men in 8 sail of ships, commanded by Capt. Davis, Capt. Swan, Capt. Townley and Capt. Knight, with a fireship and three tenders, which last had not a constant crew.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

TE'NDON. } Fr. Tendon; It. Tendine; Sp. TE'NDINOUS. } Tendon; Low Lat. Tendo, from Gr. τενω, τειν-ειν, to stretch. Cotgrave calls it—"A tail of a muscle; a bloodless instrument of motion, consisting partly of the sinew, and partly of the ligament and fibers, which issue confusedly from the belly of a muscle."

We now rest convinced that the mind does not act herself upon the limbs, but draws them to and fro by tendons, muscles, nerves and fibres.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 3.

Nervous and tendinous parts have worse symptoms, and are harder of cure than fleshy ones.—Wiseman. Surgery.

TE'NDRIL, n. Fr. Tendron, tendrillon, the tender branch or sprig of a plant. Usually applied to—

The claspers of plants, by which they climb or support themselves.

Shee as a vail down to the slender waste
Her unadorned golden tresses wore Dishevel'd, but in wanton ringlets wav'd
As the vine curls her tendrils.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

So may thy tender blossoms fear no blight,
Nor goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite,
As thou shalt guide my wandering feet to find
The fragrant greens I seek, my brows to bind.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

— Mingled with the curling growth
Of tendrils hops, that flaunt upon their poles,
More airy wild than vines along the sides
Of treacherous Falernum.

Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

We found here an holy family, by Rubens, which is far from being one of his best pictures; it is that in which there is a parrot on the pedestal of a pillar, biting vine tendrils.

TE'NEBROUS. } Fr. Ténébreux; It. Tene- TE'NEBRIOS. } bròso; Sp. Tenebroso; Lat.
TE'NEBROSITY. } Tenebrosus; from tenebræ, darkness; from tenere, quod homines in tenebris quasi teneantur; giving, thus, the metaphorical a priority to the literal significancy.

Dark, obscure, gloomy.

The most dark tenebrous night
Is fain to flee and turn her back.

J. Hall. Court of Virtue, (1565.)

Writers put peculiar signs of head melancholy, from the sole distemperature of spirits in the braine, as they are hot, cold, dry, moist, all without matter, from the motion alone, and tenebrosity of spirits.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 198.

He [Chrysippus] affirmeth that the air by nature is dark, and for that cause, by consequence it is also the primitive cold: and that tenebrosity or darkness is directly opposite unto light and clearness, and the coldness thereof to the heat of fire.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 882.

Where moon and stars for villains only made?

To guide, yet screen them, with tenebrious light?

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

TENEMENT. } Fr. Tenement; Law Lat.
TENEMENTAL. } Tenementum, from ten-ere, to TENEMENTARY. } hold. See TENANT.
Any thing held or holden, or occupied; lands, houses, &c.

The hie men of the lond conseil'd tham bituene,
To do down Edwy at a parlement, & tillie his brother Edgare gyf the tenement.

R. Brunne, p. 34.

In the xiiii. yere of kynge Edward at a parlyament holden at Westmynster, were made the statutes called Addimenta Gloucestrie, which is to meane Addicions of Statutes made and put to suche as before tyme were made at the parlyamēt holden at Gloucester, y^e whiche statutes made to re-fourme suche persones as mysused the lādes and tenementes, comynge to theym by reason of the dower, or landes of theyr wyues.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1286.

They will wrangle and go to law, nay, they will be ready to enter the lists and combat for a plot of ground whereupon a house standeth, about some corner of a messuage or end of a little tenement.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 147.

Such were the Ceorls among the Saxons; but of two sorts, one that hired the lord's outland or tenementary land (called also the Folcland) like our farmers.

Spelman. Of Feuds & Tenures, c. 7.

Tenement is a word of still greater extent (than land) and though in its vulgar acceptation it is only applied to houses and other buildings, yet in its original, proper and legal sense, it signifies every thing that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature: whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial ideal kind.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 2.

The other, or tenemental lands, they distributed among their tenants.—Id. Ib. c. 6.

TE'NET. Also written tenent, (Brown, b. vii. c. 1.)

An opinion, doctrine, which any one (tenet) holds; which any persons (tenent) hold.

We endeavour'd to reclaim the said Sir John, and try'd all ways and means that we could devise to reduce him to the unity of the church, declaring unto him the doctrines, tenets, and determinations of the holy Roman and universal church, relating to those points.

State Trials. 1 Hen. V. 1413. Sir John Oldcastle.

To open therefore a door for entrance, there is no reason but the tenet must be this.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. viii.

But why do I suffer this babbler to lead me out of my way? what is all this sleevesse discourse to a man that never said, never thought every vow of this kind unlawfull, nor every breach of such vow sinlesse? When he takes me with this tenet, let him load me with authorities.

Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. § 9.

So that men will disbelieve their own eyes, renounce the evidence of their senses, and give their own experience the lye rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these sacred tenets.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20.

In recommending the doctrine which this book particularly enforces, I know that I am justified by the holy scriptures, by the church, by the tenets of the most learned and virtuous of the dissenters, and the greatest divines of this country, who have displayed their abilities either by the press or the pulpit.—Knox. Christian Philosophy, § 59.

TE'NNIS. Jeu de palme. A game with the hand; also played with a bat; a racket, from the Fr. Tenez, accipe, take; a word which the French, who excel in this game, use when they hit the ball. Skinner has two other conjectures not so plausible.

Gascone and his brother Yuan fell out toguyder, playeng at tennes, and Gascone gaue hym a blowe.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 26.

Tenyse, selledome vsed, and for a lyttell space, is a good exercise for yong men, but it is more violent than shootynge, by reason that two men do play.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 27.

These four garrisons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, nor hide himself.—Spenser. State of Ireland.

They have but drunke once together at the taverne, or met in the tennis court, or else turned into a tabling house, and played at dice and hazzard one with the other.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 185.

But the voice stirreth and hitteth against smooth and polished solid places, by which it is broken & sent back again in manner as we do see a tennis-ball when it is smitten upon a wall: insomuch that in the pyramides of Ægypt, one voice delivered within them, rendereth foure or five resonances or echoes for it.—Id. Ib. p. 687.

1908

A tennis-ball whether in motion by the stroke of a racket, or lying still at rest, is not by any one taken to be a free agent.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

Tennis, or the pilæ ludus, is a truly classical game; highly esteemed by the most respectable Greeks and Romans; and recommended by Galen as one of the most salutary exercises.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 36.

TE'NON. } Fr. Tenon, from tenir, to hold.
TE'NENT. } The end of a rafter, beam, any piece of wood, &c. so cut as to let in and hold into another piece—also cut to receive it—called the mortice.

Cardinals are not so called, because the hinges on which the Church of Rome doth move; but from Cardo, which signifieth the end of a tenon put into a mortais, being accordingly fixed and fastened to their respective churches.

Fuller. Worthies. Generall.

There is a fair house on London Bridge, commonly called None-such, which is reported to be made without either nails or pins, with crooked tennons fastened with wedges and other (as I may term them) circumferential devices.

Id. Ib. Staffordshire.

If chance could make a beam of a house, and could have made tenents at either end, yet it is not possible to conceive that chance could cast it to be just of a fit length to answer the congruity of its contiguation to another piece of timber, or fit the mortises of other pieces of timber to those tenents, or fit the particles and scantlets to answer just one another.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 330.

A mortice and tenon, or ball and socket joint, is wanted at the hip, that not only the progressive step may be provided for, but the interval between the limbs may be enlarged or contracted at pleasure.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

TE'NOUR. Fr. Teneur; It. Tenore; Sp. Tenor; Lat. Tenor, tenere; Gr. τειν-ειν, tendere, extendere, to stretch; nam ut teneamus, nervos extendimus. (Tenor, anciently called tonor, Gr. Tovos, Quintil. lib. i. c. 5.) Tenour,—

The course kept or held; progress, order, kept or continued; the continuance or continuity, purport or purpose; mode or manner pursued.

In music (generally) the tone; but distinguished from treble and base.

Than, as above is sayde, to auoyde the enormytees, and to reforme the euyl rule than vsyd in the lande by suche personys as daylye were about the kyng, many & dyuerse ordenaūcis were made, wherof the tenoure is sette out in the ende of this boke.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1257.

And we knowe well that who soeuer wyll iust with you shall fynde you here these thyrty dayes, acordynge to the tenoure of your chalenge.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 168.

Ye shall not any where lacke any one of all these thynges, yf ye shall wyth pure hertes accordynge to the tenoure of my commandemente, diligently prouide and laboure that the gospel goe foreward and daily encrease.

Udal. Luke, c. 9.

And the receivd opinion of the thing,
For some unhallow'd string that vilely jarr'd,
Hath so unseason'd now the ears of men,
That who doth touch the tenour of that vein,
Is held but vain.

Daniel. Musophilus.

Base striketh more air, than it can well strike equally: and the treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift, to make the sound equall; and therefore a mean, or tenor, is the sweetest part.—Bacon. Natural Hist. § 173.

Lo, now reuiuing my disast'rous stile,
I prosecute the tenour of my fate,
And follow forth at danger's highest rate,
In forraigne realmes my fortune for a while.

Stirling, s. 56.

All of a tenour was their after-life,
No day discolour'd with domestick strife;
No jealousy, but mutual truth believ'd,
Secure repose, and kindness undeceiv'd.

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The whole tenor of the gospels and epistles shows, that human virtues are all light in the balance, and have no proper efficacy in themselves for procuring salvation.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 473.

TENSE. Fr. Temps; It. Tèmpo; Lat. Tempus. See the quotations.

There are only three simple tenses or times; the present, as amo, I love; the past, as amavi, I have loved; and the future, as amabo, I shall or will love.—Port-Royal, c. 15.

The tenses are used to mark present, past, and future time, either indefinitely without reference to any beginning, middle, or end; or else definitely, in reference to such distinctions.—Harris. Hermes b. i. c. 7.

And here I must observe that the moods and tenses themselves are merely abbreviations: I mean that they are nothing more than the circumstances of manner and time, added to the verb in some languages by distinguishing terminations.—Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 7.

TENSURE. } from Bacon in v. TENT.

He that in this wise hath appeased and settled the trouble or tension of the spirits in the center of the body, if haply there should remaine some superfluity behind, it would do him no great harme.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 509.

For gold (as we see) is the closest (and therefore the heaviest) of metals: and is likewise the most flexible and tensible.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 327.

All bodies ductile, and tensile, [as metals] that will be drawne into wires; wooll and tow that will be drawn into yarn, or thred; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing, strong.—Id. Ib. § 845.

For the libration or reciprocation of the spirits in the tensility of the muscles would not be so perpetual, but cease in a small time, did not some more mystical principle then what is merely mechanical give assistance.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 10.

The skin was tense, also rippled and blistered.

Wiseman. Surgery.

Should the pain and tenseness of the part continue, the operation must take place.—Sharp. Surgery.

But others there were amongst the ancient atomists, who could not conceive sensations themselves, to be thus caused by corporeal effluvia, or exuvius membranes, streaming from bodies continually, and that for divers reasons alledged by them; but only by a pressure upon the optick nerve by reason of a tension of the intermedium air or æther.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 851.

From choler is a hot burning pain; a beating pain from the pulse of the artery; a tensive pain from distention of the parts by the fulness of humours.—Floyer. On Humours.

When Fancy's vivid spark impels the soul
 To scorn quotidian scenes, to spurn the bliss
 Of vulgar minds, what nostrum shall compose
 Its fatal tension? Shenstone. Economy, pt. i.

The string which is constantly kept in a state of tension will vibrate on the slightest impulse.—Knox. Ess. No. 21.

TENT. From tend, to heed,—take tent, i. e. take heed, take care. (See TEND.) It is the same word as the following, though so differently applied.

But the Spirit seith openli, that in the laste tymes summen schulen departe from the feith ghyuyng tent to spiritis of errour.—Wiclif. 1 Tymo. c. 4.

Til I come take tent to redyng, to exortacioun, and techyng.—Id. Ib.

 The soldan smote, and there he laie.
 The chas is left for thilke daie,
 And he was bore in to a tent. Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The two Turkes deliuered them a letter for to beare to the lord great master from the great Turke, and then returned safely into their tents.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 90.

No lesse this matter passeth in thought, thē the short cloath dooeth in a false weauers hande. Ye haue streigned it on the tentours, and drawn it on the perche, for to lengthen the life.—Golden Boke, Let. 5.

But most men ordinarily do fault herein exceeding much: now when they be wearied, toyled, and foiled with painfull labours and wants, yeeld their bodies to be melted and spent quite with voluptuous pleasures; and afterwards againe, wrest and straine them as it were upon the teinters, immediately upon the fruition of some pleasures.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 513.

Saint Paul's tent-making was as much against the calling of an apostle, as sitting in a secular tribunal is against the office of a bishop.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy asserted.

—The smiles of knaues Tent in my cheekes, and schoole boyes teares take vp
 The glasses of my sight.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 2.

For since these armes of mine, had seuen yeares pith,
 Till now, some nine moones wasted, they haue vs'd
 Their dearest action, in the tented field.
Id. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

The women who are said to weave hangings and curtains for the grove, were no other then makers of tentories, to spread from tree to tree.—Evelyn, b. iv. § 8.

Upon the mount the king his tentage fixt,
 And in the town the barons lay in sight.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

—At some times
 We fear he will be bankrupt; he do's stretch
Tenter his credit so; embraces all,
 And to't, the winds have been contrary long.
Beaum. & Fletch. Beggar's Bush, Act ii. sc. 3.

I have put all my small knowledge, observations, and reading, upon the tenter, to satisfy your lordship's desires touching this subject.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 60.

—Next them
 My gentlemen, my cavaliers and captains,
 Ten deep and trapt with tenter-hooks to take hold
 Of all occasions.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act ii.

This motion upon pressure, and the reciprocal thereof, which is motion upon tensure, we use to call (by one common name) motion of liberty; which is, when any body, being forced to a preternaturall extent, or dimension, delivereth and restoreth it self to the naturall: as when a blown bladder (pressed) riseth again; or when leather or cloth tentured spring back.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 12.

The Shabander of Achin had a tent set up there, he being the chief manager of her affairs; and for the more security, he had 2 or 3 small brass guns of a minion bore planted by his tent all the day, with their muzzles against the river.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

"Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own sabre gave,
 In the vile habit of a village-slave,
 The foe deceiv'd, he passed the tented plain,
 In Troy to mingle with the hostile train."
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

Easily we may imagine what acerbity of pain must be endured by our Lord, in his tender limbs being stretched forth, racked, and tentered, and continuing for a good time in such a posture.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

I would not detract from his [Regulus] merit, nor pretend to dive into the exact situation of his thoughts, therefore shall suppose what I conceive possible in theory, that he might feel so strong a satisfaction of mind as over balanced the pain of the tenters.

Id. Ib. Act iii. sc. 1.

Oh that I had my boxes, and my lints now,
 My stupes, my tents, and those sweet helps of nature.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iii.

The next day he complaining of pain, I open'd the wound, and found it tented at both orifices, the arm swell'd, and a little disturbed; as wounds in that place are subject to be, when the blood is shut in by tents, and not dress'd rationally by astringents and good bandage.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 6.

TENTATION. } Fr. Tentation; Sp. Tenta- TENTATIVE. } tion; Lat. Tentatio, from tent-are, to try, to tempt.

Trial, or temptation. Tentative,—
 That can or may try; experimental.

Howbeit yf we well consyder these twoo thinges, tentation and persecucion, wee maye finde that eyther of theym is ineydente into the tother. For bothe by tentacion the diuel persecuteth vs, and by persecucion the dyuell also tempteth vs.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1177.

But yf when the plage hangeth ouer our heads thre or four of the are not sufficiēt to cōfirme & strengthen vs, truly an hundreth shuld be sufficiēt to ouercō al aduersete & contrary tentations.—Caluine. Foure Sermons, Ser. 2.

Dauid in dede knew right wel yf he was banished from Jury not w'toute God's prouidēce: yet is he not thereby stayed nor letted to come vnto God & to make his complaints vnto him: not because his tentation was easie & light, for he semed vtterly to be cast of frō God if we only cōsider ye miserable state of this present life.—Id. Ib. Ser. 3.

Faishood, though it be but tentative, is neither needed nor approved by the God of truth; if policy have allowed officious untruths; religion never.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Jehu killing the Sons of Ahab.

The Parisian miracles were tentative. Out of many thousand sick, infirm and diseased persons, who resorted to the tomb, the professed history of the miracles contains only nine cures.—Paley. Evidences, pt. i. c. 2. Prop. 2.

 drawn or extended, over a broad surface, to a thin, slender state.

Thin, slender; unsubstantial; slight, small.

Those freckles thou supposet me disgrace,
 Are those pure parts that in my lovely face,
 By their so much tenuity do slight,
 My brother's beams assisting me with light.
Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

By reason of this tenuity and continuity, when oyle doth froath or fume, it suffereth no wind or spirit to enter it.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 607.

The subtlety and tenuity whereof [body of our Saviour Christ] appeared, from his entring in when the doors were shut, and his vanishing out of sight.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 799.

The thing I speak of is as easie to be apprehended, as how infection should pass in certain tenuous streams through the air, from one house to another.
Glanvill. Ess. 6.

If you say that it is a corporeal substance, you can understand no other than matter more subtle and tenuous then the animal spirits themselves, mingled with them and dispersed through the vessels and porosities of the body.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. i. c. 11.

They must needs conceive that death reduces us to a pitiful thin pittance of being, that our substance is in a manner lost, and nothing but a tenuous reek remains.
Id. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 2.

Now by reason of its gross consistency, it [the body] is an unwieldy luggage to the soul, and doth very much clog and incumber her in her operations; it will then be wrought into so fine and tenuous a substance, as that instead of a clog, it will be a wing to the soul.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Now how astonishing soever it may appear to find a drop of wax shattered into such a multitude of pieces, our astonishment must encrease when we reflect on the great tenuity of the wax, and how far it is from being a solid substance.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 3.

In the iris of the eye, and the drum of the ear, the tenuity of the muscles is astonishing. They are microscopic hairs; must be magnified to be visible; yet are they real, effective muscles.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

Fair Stabizæ, with Cumean Sibyl's seats,
 And Bala's tepid baths and green retreats.
Welsted. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

This kindness, it seems, is not so well improved by her as it deserved; but she is surprized by another fit of drowsy negligence and tepidity.
Richardson. On the Old Testament, (1655.)

And besides that they [the wise men of Bethlehem] upbraided the tepidity and infidell baseness of the Jewish nation, who stood unmoved and unconcerned by all the circumstances of wonder, and stirred not one step to make enquiry after, or to visit the new born king.

Bp. Taylor. Life of Christ, pt. i. § 4.

Then unguents sweet and tepid streams we shed;
Tears flow'd from every eye, and o'er the dead
Each clipt the curling honours of his head.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

The small pox, mortal during such a season, grew more favorable by the tepor and moisture in April.—Arbuthnot.

—The flood of life

“A measure so called, because the third part (triens) of another measure, called a pipe,” (Skinner.) It is also applied to a third part or portion of other measures:—in Hackluyt, of a degree.

—The heavenly mansions,
Clearly searched by smale fractions,
First by seconds, terces, and eke quartes.

Chaucer. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

The middle between them both is 50 degrees and a terce in latitude.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 210.

This citie lieth in nine degrees and one terce.

Id. Ib. p. 552.

For I search'd every piece of wine; yes sure, sir,
And every little terce, that could but testifie.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act ii. sc. 1.

This insect now, whose active spite,
Teaz'd him with never-ceasing bite,
With so much judgment play'd his part,
He had him both in terce and quart.—Somerville, Fab. 2.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 479.

And bang'em up together as a tassel,
Upon the stretch, a flock of fearfull pigeons.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Loyal Subject, Act i. sc. 3.

It happen'd as a boy, one night,
Did fly his tarsel of a kite.

Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

With empty hands no tassels you can lure,
But fulsome love for gain we can endure.

Pope. The Wife of Bath.

TE'REBINTH. Fr. Térébinthe; It. Terebinto;
Sp. Terebinto; Lat. Terebinthus; Gr. Τερεβινθος, the turpentine tree. Vossius thinks the name Arabic.

And lyke wyse as the terebyntes and oke-trees bring forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute.

Bible, 1551. Esay, c. 6.

Moreover in Syria groweth the terebinth or turpentine tree.—Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 6.

Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. July.

TE'REBRATE, v. } Lat. Terebrare, from TEREBRA'TION. } Terere; Gr. Τερεειν, to bore.

To bore, to perforate, to pierce through or penetrate.

Consider the three-fold effect of Jupiter's trisulc, to burn, discuss, and terebrate.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

For a sample of this branch of my survey, let us chuse the tegument of earth-worms, which we shall find completely adapted to their way of life and motion, being made in the most compleat manner possible for terebrating the earth, and creeping where their occasions lead them.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 12.

It hath been touched before, that terebration of trees doth make them prosper better; but it is found also, that it maketh the fruit sweeter, and better.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 463.

I presently made a circular incision, and raised up that part of the hairy scalp in order to terebration, and fill'd up the wound with dossils of lint, press'd out of red wine.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 9.

TERRET. Lat. Teres, (from Terere,) formed into roundness.

To the stars nature hath given no such instruments, but made them round and teret like a globe.

TERGIVERSA'TION. } It. Tergiversare; Sp.
Tergiversar; Lat. Tergiversari. Compounded of the Lat. Tergum, and versatum, past part. of versare, to turn.

To turn the back; to turn round; to turn away, or aside; to shift, to shuffle, to evade.

The Briton never tergivers'd
But was for adverse drubbing;
And never turn'd his back to aught
But to a post for scrubbing.

Saint George for England, pt. ii.

For, to conclude, for all his crafty cauteles and tergiversations alledged out of the law, yet neither his cause could be so defended, nor his behaviour so excused, but that he was therefore both justly imprisoned, and also in the end most lawfully deprived.

State Trials. 3 Edw. VI. 1550. Bp. Bonner.

Especially in defining and determining the law upon those poyntes, whose justice is not yet so manifest, but by tergiversation of the adversary may peradventure be eftsones called into controversie.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. vol. v. App. No. 26.

Who also if he were conscious that his assumment to the Platonick theology were not so defensible a thing, doth himself sometime as it were tergiversate and decline it by equivocating in the word Henades, taking them for the ideas, or the intelligible gods before mentioned.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 569.

Even so in this present case now in question; that covenant which hath an evident conclusion, and admitteth no tergieversation at all, we ought to esteem more firm and effectual.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 651.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscado retreats, and elusory tergieversations.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

But that no suspicion of tergieversation may be fastned upon me, I am content to deal with you a little, at your own weapons.

Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, pt. i. c. 5. § 85.

Jonas the prophet discovered the like tergieversation and backwardness as to the errand he was sent upon to the Ninevites.—Waterland, vol. ix. Ser. 9.

Thus selde is seene, the trouth to termine,
That age and youth draw by o line,
And where that folly hath domination,
Wisdomes is put in subjection.

Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

Now doth this mā al this while two ways actually cōtinue his pilgrimage, that is to witte as maister Gersonne in the Latin tong termeth it, in a naturall continuance, and in a moral continuance.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1376.

M. What fruit would then come of penance?

Tyndall. Of your iugglyng terme penance I can not affirme.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 320.

Then Mychelmas came, and the generall cōsaiyle began, suche as Englysshemen call the terme, wherein all maters be debated.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 204.

And we must conside howe this comparison of the two chaunges is made as it were by proportion. Wherin eche chaunge bath his special ende and terme, (whervnto): and therefore accordeinge to terme and ende, hath his worke of chaunge, speciall and seuerall both by God's worke.

Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of the Presence, fol. 109.

And although the thing which is terminable, and hath an end, is called sometimes perpetuall: yet because in holy scripture, and in vse of the church, and in the bookes of philosophers most commonly that is taken to bee perpetuall, which hath no end of time hereafter to come.

State Trials. 6 Rich. II. 1583. John Wicliffe.

These being summoned to appeare before the iustices, with one Hugh Aberneth, and other of their complices, vpon their contempt so to doo, were proclaimed traitors, and as the Scottish men tearme it, put to the horne.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1250.

B. Jonson, Epig. 3.

How absurd had these guests been, if they had terminated the thanks in the servitors; and had said, “We have it from you; whence ye had it, is no part of our care.”

Bp. Hall. Cont. Five Loaves & Two Fishes.

“Small show of man was yet upon his chin,
His phenix down began but to appear,
Like unshorn velvet, on that termless skin,
Whose bare out-brag'd the web it seem'd to wear.”

Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

The clerks are partly rewarded by that mean also [petty fees] for their entries, discharges, and some other writings, besides that termly fee which they are allowed.

Bacon. On the Office of Alienations.

The fees, or allowances, that are termly given to these deputies, receiver, and clerks, for recompence of these their pains, I do purposely permit; because they be not certain, but arbitrary.—Id. Ib.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

It is to be considered there is a double consent to a proposition, the one is direct, the other a reflex; the first is directly terminated upon the honesty or dishonesty of the object, the other upon the manner of it, and modality.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

TER

I wish that milder love, or death,
That ends our miseries with our breath,
Would my affections terminate;
For to my soul, depriv'd of peace,
It is a torment worse than these Thus wretchedly to love and hate.

Cotton. Stanzas de Monsieur Berlaud.

Precisely obtaining the like termination, and falling even of his clauses, polishing, smothering, and perusing his periods and sentences, not with the rough hammer, and pickax, but with the file and plainer most exactly.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 809.

A good man is more an image of God than any painter or engraver can make: but if we give divine honours to a good man it were idolatry: therefore much more if we give it to an image. I use this instance to take off the trifle of worship relative, and worship terminative.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

Neither can this be eluded by saying, that though the same worship be given to the image of Christ, as to Christ himself, yet it is not done in the same way; for it is terminatively to Christ or God, but relatively to the image, that is, to the image for God's or Christ's sake.

Id. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. § 12.

And this truth, being the thing it self subjectively, in words expressively, in the mind of man terminatively, presupposeth a double conformity or adequation.

Bp. Hall. The Best Bargaine.

If the servant of Christ passeth from death to life, then not from death to the terminable pains of a part of hell.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. § 4.

This made them perceive that the main of their dispute was about the signification of that term.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 9.

General propositions, of what kind soever, are then only capable of certainty, when the terms us'd in them stand for such ideas, whose agreement or disagreement, as there express'd, is capable to be discover'd by us.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

We are then certain of their truth or falshood, when we perceive the ideas the terms stand for, to agree or not agree, according as they are affirm'd or deny'd one of the other.

Id. Ib.

Tell him, all terms, all commerce, I decline,
Nor share his council, nor his battle join,
For once deceiv'd, was his; but twice, were mine.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

Beds of all various herbs, for ever green,
In beauteous order terminate the scene.

Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. vii.

These terms are supposed by Mr. Selden to have been instituted by William the Conqueror; but sir Henry Spelman hath clearly and learnedly shown, that they were gradually formed from the canonical constitutions of the church; being indeed no other than those leisure seasons of the year, which were not occupied by the great festivals or fasts, or which were not liable to the general avocations of rural business.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 18.

When by the statute 21 Hen. VIII. c. 15. the termor (that is, he who is entitled to the term of years) was protected against these fictitious recoveries, and his interest rendered secure and permanent, long terms began to be more frequent than before.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 9.

He [man] has been termed likewise a laughing animal; but it is said that some men have never laughed.

Idler, No. 1.

These hills, which were barren, continued for about three miles more, and then terminated in a large plain, which was full of good houses, and people who appeared to live in great affluence.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 10.

A good commencement has ever been found by experience, auspicious to a good progress and a happy termination.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 26.

TERMAGANT, adj. } Lye says, means—TERMAGANT, n. } Most powerful (sc.)

Deus: some think it formed from ter magnus; but he himself thinks it pure A. S. compounded of tyr, (which, prefixed to adjectives, has the effect of an augment,) and mag-an, potens, mighty, (tyr-magan), most mighty; and hence, he adds, transferred (very strangely) to a quarrelsome woman: one prepared for strife, with either words or blows. It was not restricted in its application to the female sex.

He sayde, "Child, by Termagant,
But if thou prike out of myn haunt,
Anon I slee thy stede with mace."

Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,740.

That is true (say I) if mānis inuented tyrāny be a lawfulness, or if the greates customer of Sodome, or terryble termagant of Rome, be allowed for a lawe maker aboue God.

Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 1.

'Twas time to counterfet, or that hotte termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit?

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 4.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements their souls retire:
The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up and take a salamander's name.

Pope. Rape of the Lock, c. 1.

There is something of an irritability in the constitution of women whose minds are uncultivated, which, when increased by opposition, and confirmed by habit, usually produces a termagant, a shrew, or a virago.—Knox. Ess. No. 36.

TERNARY. } Fr. Ternaire; It. Ternario; TERNION. } Sp. Ternario; Lat. Ternarius, ternio.

Three; the number three.

Wherevnto answer may be made, that as a quadrangle in geometrie compriseth in it a triangle, and a quaternion in arithmetike containeth a ternion; so in logike a vniuersall proposition comprehendeth a particular.

Holinshed. Chronicles. Hen. III. an. 1225.

The ternary or triad, was not only accounted a sacred number amongst the Pythagoreans, but also as containing some mystery in nature, was therefore made use of by other Greeks and Pagans, in their religious rites.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 547.

And after another manner likewise of composition, it [the number of nine] standeth of two triangled numbers, to wit, a senary, and a ternary, whereof both the one and the other is a perfect number.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 652.

Disposing them into ternions of three general hierarchies, the first relating to the immediate attendance of the Almighty, the other two to the government of the creature, both general and particular.

Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, § 7.

The wonder may cease, if it be considered, that in the same place the equality is mentioned as belonging to the ternary number, here considered as a figure of the Trinity.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 93.

TE'RRACE, n. } Anciently written Terras
TE'RRACE, v. } or Tarras. Fr. Terrasse;
It. Terrazzo; Sp. Terrazo, from terra, earth.

Earth raised or thrown up as a bank, mound, platform; a raised or elevated walk or parade; and then applied to—any raised or elevated walk or parade; a balcony, so constructed as to afford means of an increased admission of light.

But being discried as they came holding downe their heads within two hundred paces from the fort, the gunner being vpon the terrace of the fort, after he had cried, arme, arme, these be French men, discharged twice vpō them a coluerine.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 358.

Here they a stately pallace did behold
Of pompous shew, much more then she had told,
With many towres and tarras mounted hye.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

And Lucullus self would also many times be amongst them, in those terrasses and pleasant walks, delighting much to talk with them.—North. Plutarch, p. 446.

Before the front of the school a stately Crupto-porticus, or fair walk, all the length of the school, with pillars erected; and on the top thereof a leaden tarras, with railles and bannisters.—Fuller. Worthies. Shropshire.

As touching open galleries and terraces, they were devised by the Greekes, who were wont to cover their houses with such.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 25.

Howsoever by this means, the reception of light into the body of the building, was very prompt, both from without and from within; which we must now supply, either by some open form of the fabrick, or among graceful refuges, by terracing any story, which is in danger of darkness; or lastly by perpendicular lights from the roof.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 42.

Then tell, dear favourite muse!
What serpent's that which still resorts,
Still lurks in palaces and courts?
Take thy unwonted flight,
And on the terrace light.

Swift. Ode to Sir Wm. Temple.

Slow let us trace the matchless vale of Thames;

TERRAQUEOUS. Formed from the Lat. Terra, earth, and aqua, water.
Consisting of land and water.

Yet there may possibly be, for ought we know, one plastick nature or life belonging to the whole terrestrial (or terraqueous) globe, by which all plants and vegetables, continuous with it, may be differently formed, according to their different seeds.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 171.

The distance between America and the East Indies westward, are over-reckoned in the breadth of Asia and Africk, the Atlantick sea, or the American continent, or all together; and so that tract of the terraqueous globe, must be so much shortened.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

'Tis thus reciprocating, each with each,
Alternately the nations learn and teach;
While providence enjoins to ev'ry soul
A union with the vast terraqueous whole.

Cowper. Charity.

TERREMOT. It. Terremoto; Fr. Terremot, or mote or muet, (Roquefort.) Motus terra,—a motion, or quaking of the earth.

God, euen from the beginning to this daye to be defended preserved and encreaced.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, Arg.

We must cheffy cōsider how precious & honorable ye cofessio & testificatio of our faith is befor God.

Caluine. Foure Sermons, Ser. 2.

The story of Daniel is a testimony of the preseruacion of the chirche beutified with great glory, even then when it semeth almost extincte and destroid.

Joye. Expositio of Daniel, Arg.

By sufficient prooffe and letters testimoniall it appeareth that they are free from the infections of the plague.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 156.

I will and require you to declare, and show to your parishioners, that no testimonials brought from any of them, shall stand in any effect; nor that any such persons shall be admitted to God's board, or receive their communion, until they have submitted themselves to be confessed of their own curats, &c.—Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. iii. No. 26.

Optatus compares the scriptures to the testator's will: if there be a controversie amongst the descendants of the house, run to the scriptures, see the original will: the gospels are Christ's testament; and the epistles are the codicils annex'd, and but by these we shall never know the will of the testator.—Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i.

VOL. II.

Quintus Hortensius received a forg'd will of Munitius from some Hæredipetæ or testamentary cheaters, and because they offered to verifie it, and to give him a share, he defended the forgery, and possessed his part.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 3.

Whereof he hath given assurance to all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead; how clear a testation have the inspired prophets of God given of old to this truth?

Bp. Hall. Satan's Fiery Darts quenched.

The vigilant care and devotion which they employed in saving and keeping the sacred fire, was a signe and solemne testimoniall of the religious observance which they carried respectively to the whole element of fire.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 613.

The said council testified under their hands, that they never perswaded, but disapproved of, the undertaking.

Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, (1599.)

The strength and validity of every testimony must bear proportion with the authority of the testifier; and the authority of the testifier is founded upon his ability and integrity.

Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 1.

Let him be but testimonied in his owne bringings forth, and hee shall appeare to the envious, a scholler, a statesman, and a soldier.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 2.

I doubt not but one reason, why Augustus should so passionately be concerned for the preservation of the Æneis, which its author had condemned to be burnt, as an imperfect poem, by his last will and testament, was, because it did him a real service, as well as an honour.

Dryden. Æneis, Ded.

By the common law, the bishop had the lawful distribution of the goods of persons, dying testate, and intestate.—Ayliffe.

Thus we see the holy men of old, who had revelations from God, had something else besides that internal light of assurance in their own minds, to testify to them that it was from God.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 19.

Certainly acknowledgments of the divine goodness, and solemn testifications of our thankfull sense thereof, (whatever the abused world may now imagine,) was always, is now, and ever will be the principal and most noble part of all religion immediately addressed to God.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

The difficulty is, when testimonies contradict common experience, and the reports of history and witnesses clash with the ordinary course of nature, or with one another.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 16.

The right of inheritance, or descent to the children and relations of the deceased, seems to have been allowed much earlier than the right of devising by testament.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 1.

This spiritual jurisdiction of testamentary causes is a peculiar constitution of this island; for in almost all other (even in popish) countries all matters testamentary are under the jurisdiction of the civil magistrate.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 7.

By this law the right of testamentation is taken away,
which the inferiour tenures had always enjoyed.

Burke. Tracts on the Popery Laws.

They are thy witnesses, who speak thy pow'r
And goodness infinite, but speak in ears
That hear not, or receive not their report.

In vain thy creatures testify of thee,

Till thou proclaim thyself.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

TESTA/CEOUS. Fr. Testacée; It. Testaceo;
Lat. Testaceus, from Testa, res, tosta, any thing baked, hardened. See TESTS.

And flavour'd Chian wines with incense fum'd

To slake patrician thirst.—Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

Sometimes [we shall find] testaceous substances of various kinds on the tops of mountains, and often in the heart of the hardest marble.—Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. i. c. 3.

TE/STER. Lat. Testa, a shell; in Fr. Teste or tête, a shell, the scull-bone; and then, generally, the head. Fr. Testière, any kind or fashion of head piece, armour for the head. It. Testiera; Sp. Testero. In English, applied to—

The head or top of a bed.

Ther mayst thou see devising of harneis
So uncouth and so riche, and wrought so wele
Of goldsmithry, of brouding, and of stele;
The sheldes brighte, testeres, and trappures;
Gold-hewen helmes, hauberkes, cote-armures.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2499.

Also the beddes, testars and pyllowes, beseme not the hall, no more than the carpettes and kushshines become the stable.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 1

1913

Who led from room to room amazed is to see
The furnitures and states, which all imbroderies be,
The rich and sumptuous beds, with tester covering plumes,
And various as the sutes, so various the perfumes.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

He then an iron net prepar'd,
Which he to the bed's tester rear'd.—King. Art of Love.

TE/STICLE. Fr. Testicule; It. Testicolo; Sp.
Testiculo; Lat. Testiculus, diminutive of Testis, testes, (sc.) sexus virilis.

That a bever to escape the hunters, bites off his testicles or stones, is a tenent very ancient; and hath had thereby advantage of propagation.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

TE/STON. } A coin on which the king's TE/STERN. } head (teste, or tête), was im-TE/STERNED. } pressed. See TESTER.
TE/STER. } Fr. Testoon,—a piece of silver coin, worth eighteenpence, (Cotgrave.)

For whereas it was thought before, that the testoun was, through ill officers and ministers, corrupted, it was tried, that it had the valuation just by eight sundry kinds of melting, and 400l. of sterlin mony, a testoun being but sixpence, made 400l. 11 ounces fine of mony sterling.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. K. Edward's Journal.

Six pence vsually named the testone.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 25.

Deniers, testons, or crowns, being considered apart in themselves, are denier, testons and crowns; but if you give them for the hire of a ship, then besides that they are deniers, &c. they be also the fare, for ferry or passage.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 684.

Pro. What said she, nothing?

Sp. No, not so much as take this for thy pains:

To testifie your bounty, I thank you, you haue testern'd me.—Shakes. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act i. sc. 1.

Mal. There's a tester, nay, now I am a wooer, I must be bountiful.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Honest Man's Fortune.

Tra. I have a priest too,

And all shall come as even as two testers.

Id. The Woman's Prize, Act v. sc. 3.

'Tis easy learnt the art to talk by rote;

At Nando's 'twill but cost you half a groat;

The Bedford school at three-pence is not dear, sir;

At White's—the stars instruct you for a tester.

Armstrong. Taste.

TE/STY. } Fr. Testu; It. Testardo, heady,
TE/STINESS. } headstrong, self-willed; from Fr.
Teste, the head. (See TESTER.) It is applied, in English, to that self-will which renders a man
pettish or irascible—

Pettish, peevish; disposed or apt to be angry.
See the quotation from Locke.

What life lead testy men, then, that consume their days,
In inward frets, untemper'd hates, al strife with some always.—Surrey. Paraph. of Ecclesiastes, c. 5.

If frensy forced on thy testy brayne,

How blest is she to liue alone.

Vncertaine Auctors. Answer to Epitaph made by W. G. &c.

Yf ye therby be become suche, as will eyther be soone angry, testie, wayward, contencious, backbiters, or dis-semblers, by this ye may easily knowe, that your learnyng is but counterfaite.—Udal. Corinth. c. 3.

Corporall hunger hath her proper angre; but the euange-like and spiritual hunger, hath a more sharpe, and biting testinesse.—Id. Marke, c. 11.

Peace (quoth I) my good friend Planetiades, and cease to provoke Apollo against you: for a cholerick and testie god he is, and not mild and gracious.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 1078.

Amint. What vilde injury

Has stirr'd my worthy friend, who is as slow

To fight with words, as he is quick of hand?

Mel. That heap of age which I should reverence

If it were temperate; but testy years

Are most contemptible.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act i.

I am not valiant; when I was a youth,

I kept my credit with a testie trick I had,

Amongst cowards, but durst never fight.—Id. Ib. Act iii.

Nay contrariwise, there is nothing so adverse and repugnant to amity and society than testinesse, thwarting, complaining, and evermore fault-finding.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 70.

I wept for woe, the testy beldame swore,

And, foaming with her god, foretold my fate;

That I was doom'd to love, and you to hate.

Dryden. Theocritus Idyl. 3.

Testiness is a disposition or aptness to be angry.—Locke.

11 L

How do you behave in your own family? in a gentle, kind, obliging manner? or, do you make all around you unhappy, by your sullen, and testy humours; or your harsh, and brutal behaviour?—Gilpin, vol. ii. Ser. 46.

"Fie on you" (quod she) "euerichone,
 Ye nastie swine, ye idle wretches,
 Full of rotten slow tetches."—Id. House of Fame, b. iii.

A greuous burthen was thy birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancie.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

But as I said, when it did taste the worme-wood on the nipple of my dudge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to see it teachie, and fall out with the dudge.
Id. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 3.

Now in the last (which is the wrangling and techy dotage of the decrepid world) here is nothing but unquiet clashing of opinion.
Bp. Hall. Ser. To the Lords of Parliament, Feb. 1629.

Yet thus froward and techy is nature in the best; if we may not have all we would have, all that we have is nothing;
 if we be not perfectly humored, we are wilfully unthankfull;
 all Israel is nothing worth to Ahab, if he may not have one poor vineyard.—Id. Of Contentation, § 14.

His flesh riseth; his leprosy vanisheth; not the unjust fury and teckiness of the patient shall cross the cure; lest, while God is severe, the prophet should be discredited.
Id. Elisha with Naaman.

Fal. This rogue, if he had been sober, sure had beaten me, he is the most tettish knave.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act v.

TE/THER. See TED.

TE/TRAD. Fr. Tétrade; Lat. Tetras; Gr.
Tetras.
 The number four.

The latter Pythagoreans and Platonists, endeavour to give reasons why God should be called Tetras or Tetractys, from certain mysteries in that number four, as for example, first, because the tetrad is δυναμὶς τετραδός, the power of the decad.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 376.

I find the ignorance of posterity to have abused the Tetrad, as religiously as it was admired by the knowing Pythagoreans,
 to be a receptacle of superstitious and useless toys.
More. Defence of the Moral Cabbala, c. 4. § 2. App.

TETRA/GONAL. Fr. Tétragone; It. Tetragono; Sp. Tetragono; Gr. Τετρα-γωνία, consisting of four (τετρα), angles (γωνία).

Reckoning on unto the seventh day, the moon will be in a tetragonal or quadrate aspect, that is, four signs removed from that wherein the disease began, in the fourteenth day it will be in an opposite aspect; and at the end of the third septenary, tetragonal again.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

TETRA/LOGY. Gr. Τετραλογία, consisting of four fables, three tragic, and one satiric.

May we not then be excused, if, for the future, we consider the epics of Homer, Virgil, and Milton, together with this our poem, as a compleat tetralogy: in which the last worthily holdeth the place or station of the satiric piece.
Pope. Ricardus Aristarchus, &c.

TETRA/METER. Lat. Tetrametrum; Gr.
Τετραμετρον, a verse or line consisting of four measures or feet (τετρα μετρα).

The first are couplets interchanged of sixteen and fourteen feet, the second of equal tetrameters.

Bible, 1551. Id.

There is a government or tetrarchie also, but out of the quarter of Lycaonia, on that side that bordereth upon Ga-latia.—Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 27.

Near the low marshes and Enipeus' flood,
 The Pontic horse and Cappadocian stood,
 While kings and tetrarchs proud, a purple train,
 Liegemen and vassals to the Latian reign,
 Possess'd the rising grounds and drier plain.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vii.

The patriarchs had a sort of tetrarchical, or ethnarchical authority, for I suppose it is not easy to distinguish them.
Bolingbroke. Authority in Matters of Religion, § 32.

TETRA/STICK. Gr. Τετραστιχος, consisting of four lines or verses (στιχους). See DISTICH.

Antiquaries (amongst whom Mr. Selden) more value him (Robert of Gloucester) for his history than poetry; his lines being neither strong nor smooth, but sometimes sharp, as may appear by this tetrastick.
Fuller. Worthies. Gloucestershire.

TE/TRICK. } Fr. Tetrique; Sp. Tetrico; TE/TRICAL. } Lat. Tetricus; from teter, which Vossius derives from tædet.

Gloomy, sullen, morose, harsh, sour.

"He looks as if he had liv'd on Tewksbury mustard." It is spoken partly of such who always have a sad, severe, and tetric countenance.—Fuller. Worthies. Gloucestershire.

On which account he is supposed to have overlook'd this church, when first finished, with a torve and tetric countenance, as maligning men's costly devotion, and that they should be so expensive in God's service.
Id. Ib. Lincolnshire.

It is not good to be too tetric and virulent. Kinde words make rough actions plausible.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 8.

TE/TTER, n. } In Fr. Dartre; A. S. Tet-er, TE/TTER, v. } from tetrum, malum; or Fr.
Tartre, the chymical tartar, because this disease is supposed to arise from the tartar—eating the skin, (Skinner.)

Is it decent (thinke you) that their owne ancient native toong shall be shrowded in obliuion, and suffer the enimies language, as it were a tettar or ringworme, to harbor it selfe within the lawes of English conquerors?
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 1.

As for mine country, I haue shed my blood,
 Not fearing outward force: so shall my lungs
 Coine words till their decay, against those meazels
 Which we disdaine should tetter vs.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 1.

How shall we make this mode of writing sink?
 A mode, said I? 'tis a disease, I think,
 A stubborn tetter, that's not cur'd with ink.

The fool shall now fish for himself.
Alice. Be sure then
 His tewgh be tith and strong; and next no swearing,
 He'll catch no fish else.
Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act i. sc. 3.

The method and way of watering, pilling, breaking and tewtawing of hemp and flax, is a peculiar blessing.
Mortimer.

TE/WELL. Written by Holland, tuill. Fr.
Tuiau, tuijau, a pipe, quill, cane, reed-canel, (Cot-grave.) Menage derives from tubellus, the dim.
 of tubus, a tube.

A pipe, a funnel. The straight gut (intestinum rectum) was so called, (Skinner.)

And soch a smoke gan out wende,
 Out of the foule trumpes ende,
 Blacke, blue, grenishe, swartish, rede,
 As doth where that men melte lede,
 Lo, all on hie from the tewell.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

As also to helpe the providence or falling downe both of tuill and matrice, and to reduce them againe into their places.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 19.

If the longaon or tuill be fallen, and beare out of the bodie; or if that part bee affected with other accidents, bath the place with a decoction of it.—Id. Ib. c. 20.

Text is technically applied to any passage quoted from the text of Scripture, as a subject of discourse or sermon.

Textuary,—see the quotation from Bull.

Quod bonū est tenete. a tyxte of treuthes making.
Piers Ploughman, p. 63.

But, for I am a man not textuel,
 I wol not tell of textes never a del;
 I wol go to my tale, as I began.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17, 185.

For in plain text, withouten nede of glose,
 Thou hast translated the Romaunt of the Rose.
Id. Prol. to the Legende of Good Women.

Dan Salomon, as wise clerkes sain,
 Techeth a man to kepe his tongue wel;
 But as I sayd, I am not textuel.
Id. The Manciples Tale, v. 17, 263.

—Nay texte it
 Upon my forehead, if you hate me mother,
 Put me to such a shame, pray you do.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodore, Act ii.

But Pliny whom Gaza followeth, hath differently translated it, whereby he intends the exclusion unto twenty dayes, which in the textuary sense is fully accomplished in one.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 16.

In Luke 16, 17, 18, this clause against abrogating is inserted immediately before the sentence against divorce, as if it were call'd thither on purpose to defend the equity of this particular law against the foreseen rashness of common textuaries.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

He [Tighe] was an excellent textuary and profound linguist, the reason why he was employed by king James in translating of the bible.—Fuller. Worthies. Lincolnshire.

When I remember the little our Saviour could prevail about this doctrine of charity against the crabbed textuists of his time, I make no wonder.
Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, To the Parliament.

He [Mede] afterwards became an excellent linguist, curious mathematician, exact text-man; happy in making scripture to expound itself by parallel places.
Fuller. Worthies. Essex.

Many a man, who was pretty well satisfy'd of the meaning of a text of scripture, or clause in the code at first reading, has by consulting commentators quite lost the sense of it.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 9.

But Hazael, being a wicked man, went and told Benhadad the quite contrary, and then murdered him. So stands the case, upon the foot of the textual reading.
Waterland, vol. vi. p. 163.

If by a textuary, we mean him who hath not only a concordance of scriptures in his memory, but also a commentary on them in his understanding; who thinks it not enough to be ready in alleging the bare words of scripture, with the mention of chapter and verse where it is written, unless he knows the sense and meaning of what he recites. The former every illiterate sectary is able to do, who can quote scriptures by dozens and scores, the tythe whereof he understands not, and are little to his purpose; the latter is the proper commendation of the divine.
Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 6.

When some hypothesis absurd and vain
 Has fill'd with all it's fumes a critic's brain,
 The text, that sorts not with his darling whim,
 Though plain to others, is obscure to him.
Cowper. Progress of Error.

TEXTILE. } Fr. Texture; It. Testura; Sp. Textura; Lat. Textilis, texturus, textura; from texere, to weave (tegs-ere, to cover, sc. filum filo.)

That can or may be woven; woven.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as in the warp and woof of textiles.

Bacon. Naturall Historie.

This [natural glue] so peculiar, so serviceable a material, together with the curious structure of all parts ministering to this textine power, as mean a business as it may seem, is such as may justly be accounted among the noble designs and works of the infinite creator and conservator of the world.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 6.

He shews, that the most admirable things which have been taken for the effects of substantial forms, and are used as proofs of the notional hypotheses, may be the results of the meer texture and position of parts.—Glanvill. Ess. 3.

Under [one common name, fossils] are comprehended metals, minerals, or half metals, stones of divers kinds, and sundry bodies that have the texture between earth and stone.—Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 8.

There grew two olives, closest of the grove,
With roots intwin'd, and branches interwove;
Alike their leaves, but not alike they smil'd
With sister fruits, one fertile, one was wild.
Nor here the sun's meridian rays had power,
Nor wind sharp-piercing, nor the rushing shower;
The verdant arch so close its texture kept.

That they would euer in houses of thacks,
Their liues lead.

Chaucer. Dreame.

THACKED, i.e. thwacked; thumped, smacked.

And thus they were accorded and ysworne
To waite a time, as I have said before Whan Nicholas had don thus every del,
And thacked hire about the lendes wel.

Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3302.

THAN, conj. Also written Then. Dut. Dan; Ger. Danne; A. S. Thanne, thonne. Wyrstan thanne,—worse than, (Luke, xi. 26.) It is the same word as then, applied to—sequence, subsequence, succession (for instance) in taking, choosing, selecting; generally, in acting or doing. Thus—

I take this first, then that second, then that third; I take it upon comparison; I prefer it.—I do this first, then that: I give this precedence, then that may succeed. And hence applied, generally, in making comparison,—I take this before, sooner, rather than that: I do this sooner, rather than that: I think this better than, worse than, that. See especially the quotation from Grafton.

Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

First, those infinite islands of ice were ingendred and congealed in time of winter, and now by the great heat of summer were thawed, and then by ebs, floods, winds, and currents, were driven to and fro, and troubled the fleet; so that this is an argument to proue the heat in summer there to be great, that was able to thaw so monstrous mountaines of ice.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 57.

The great streames were congealed in such sort, that at their dissolving or thawing, manie bridges both of wood and stone were borne downe, and diuerse water-milles rent vp and caried awaie.
Holinshed. Chronicles. William Rufus, an. 1093.

This Antiphanes was wont to say in merriment; there was a city in the world, whereas the words so soone as ever they were out of his mouth, and pronounced, became frozen in the aire, by reason of the coldnesse in the place, and so when the heat of summer came to thaw and melt the same, the inhabitants might heare the talke which had been uttered and delivered in winter.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 206.

But bounded thus, to Scotland get you forth,

Id. The Coronation, Act i.

At length upon a turn of wind, the air about us began to thaw: our cabin was immediately filled with a dry clattering sound, which I afterwards found to be the crackling of consonants that broke above our heads, and were often mixed with a gentle hissing, which I imputed to the letter s, that occurs so frequently in the English tongue.—Tatler, No. 254.

—And where most swift it flows,
In chrystal nets, the wondring fishes close.
Then, with a moment's thaw, the streams enlarge,
And from the mesh the twinkling guests discharge.
Dryden. Tyrannick Love, Act i. sc. 1.

Beat. My lady tells you true, Madam, long tedious courtship may be proper for cold countreys, where their frosts are long a thawing; but heav'n be prais'd we live in a warm climate.—Id. An Evening's Love, Act i. sc. 2.

They soon after, with great joy, saw the snow fall in large flakes from the trees, a certain sign of an approaching thaw.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 4.

THE, v. } So the ich;—so may ich or I the, or THE, art. } thrive. Mr. Tyrwhitt refers to two other instances of this expression in Chaucer, (vv. 12,881, 16,397.) The verb, to the, A. S.
The-an, to take, to get, to gain, to thrive, is of common occurrence in our old writers.

At the time of Chaucer, (says Mr. Tyrwhitt,) the prepositive A. S. article, Se, had been long laid aside, and instead of it an indeclinable the was prefixed to all sorts of nouns in all cases, and in both numbers, (Ess. p. 21.)

The (Goth. Tho; A. S. The; Dut. De; Ger. Die) (our article, as it is called,) is the imperative of the verb Thean, (see THAT;) which may very well supply the place of the correspondent A. S. article Se, which is the imperative of Se-on, videre, for it answers the same purpose in discourse, to say—See man, or take man. For instance—

“The man that hath not musicke in himselfe is fit for treasons,” &c. Or—

That man is fit for treasons, &c.

Take man, (or see man); taken man hath not musicke, &c.

Said man, or taken man is fit for treasons, &c. (Tooke.)

This is the only example he gives, and the solution of it seems easy, and as far as it goes satisfactory; but other instances should be produced, and subjected to similar trial.

In Matt. iii.—“Make ye redy the weies of the Lord; make ye right the pathis of him,” i. e. take, assume ways of the Lord; take, assume paths of him: or, take, or assume that the Lord has (his) ways, has (his) paths; make ye them ready, make ye them right. Again—Take Lord, see Lord:—See Lord—he comes—make ready his ways, make his paths right.

“Do ye penaunce, for the kingdom of heuenes schal neigh,” What kingdom shall I take, assume, see or look for, as coming, as nigh? Take kingdom of heuen, kingdom known as kingdom of heuen—no other.

This may seem harsh; but a word without any meaning is worse: and it is manifest, that in all our uses of the article The, it directs what particular thing or things we are to take or assume as spoken of. “The (says Dr. Lowth) determines what particular thing is meant;” i. e. what particular thing we are to take or assume to be meant: and Wilkins (pt. iii. c. 5) calls The a demonstrative article, “which gives a peculiar emphasis to its substantive, and is applied only to such person or thing, as the hearer knows, or hath reason to know, because of its eminence or some precedent mention of it.”

Suppose, in Matthew, it had been written—“Make ready ways of Lord,” here would have been no word to express what ways to take or assume, as those ordered to be made ready; nor what Lord to take or assume, whose ways were so ordered.

Tyrwhitt says—The, when prefixed to adjectives or adverbs in the comparative degree, is to be considered as a corruption of thy, which was commonly put by the Saxons for tham, the ablative case singular of the article That used as a pronoun. The merier, Eo lætius: the more merry, Eo lætior; are of the same construction. “Yet fare they the worse; yet fare I never the bet.” There seems no occasion for any such hypothesis. All these expressions are comparative, and refer to degrees of mirth, &c. assumed or taken as the subject of comparison.

spectacles, sights, shews.

A place for the exhibition of spectacles; of dramatic or other performances, displays, or operations; applied met.

Theatrical, adj. is used also met.—aspiring to the effect, imitating the performance, or manner of performance, practised on the stage of a theatre.

This Scaurus when he was Ædile, caused a wonderful peece of worke to be made, and exceeding all that ever had been knowne wrought by man's hand, not onely those that have been erected for a month or such a thing, but even those that have been destined for perpetuitie; and a theatre
it was; it was able to receive foure score thousand persons to set well, and at ease.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 15.

Θδειον was a music theatre, built by Pericles, and for the contrivance of it on the inside, was full of seats and ranges of pillars; and on the outside, in the roof or covering of it, was made from one point at the top with a great many bendings, all shelving downward; and it is reported [says Plutarch] that it was so framed in imitation of the king of Persia's pavilion.—Potter. Antiquities of Greece, b. i. c. 8.

posed to atheist, and distinguished from every sect of Christian believers.

We had further observed it, to have been the method of our modern atheists, to make their first assault against Christianity, as thinking that to be the most vulnerable:
and that it would be an easy step for them from thence, to demolish all religion and theism.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref.

We had observed, that some professed opposers of atheism, had either incurred a suspicion, or at least suffered under the imputation, of being meer theists, or natural religionists only, and no hearty believers of Christianity, or friends to revealed religion.—Id. Ib.

But so it hath happened, this evident truth, that morality is founded in will, hath been long controverted even among theists.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. i. s. 4.

THEME. Fr. Thème; It. Tema; Sp. Tema;
Gr. Θεμα, from τιθεσθαι, ponere, to put or place.

A position or proposition, a subject; any thing proposed, as a subject of discourse or discussion;
also the position or station whence any thing proceeds; the origin; the original word.

Hales. Rem. Lett. from the Synod of Dort.

All the world doth either act or talke of fighting; give me leave therefore to fall upon the common theme of the times, and to tell you of an holy combat.

Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

As to themes, they have, I confess, the pretence of something useful, which is to teach people to speak handsomly and well on any subject; which, if it could be attained this way, I own would be a great advantage, there being nothing more becoming a gentleman, nor more useful in all the occurrences of life, than to be able on any occasion, to speak well and to the purpose. But this I say, that the making of themes, as is usual in schools, helps not one jot toward it.
Locke. On Education, § 171.

She turn'd the talk, avoiding that extreme,

THEN. } Also written Than. From Goth.
THENCE. } Than; A. S. Thænne, thonne; Dut.
Dan; Ger. Dann, tunc, quando. Junius derives—ab. oraw, per aphæresin, (sc. of the o;) and this is all the etymologists supply. Thence, A. S. Thonan, which (Minshew thinks) is there hence, is probably the gen. of Then, i.e. then-es; and it has its correspondent hence, A. S. Heon-an, as there, has here; thither, hither.

We have one, once; anon, i.e. in one (sc. moment); the nonce, i.e. the once; this once (sc. one time, occasion, purpose); and further, then, thence, and hence: and it admits at least of conjecture, that then may be composed of the one, and thus denote—

The one (time); at the or that one time; for that one cause; in that one cause. And thence,—

Of or from then; from the or that one time or place; from the or that one cause, source, origin.

Then (as in the quotation from Gower) is often found written tho, from A. S. Thonne, (or the word —one.) by omission of final consonants.

THEOCRACY. } Comp. of Gr. Θεος, a THEOCRATIC. } god, and κρατειν, to rule or THEOCRATICAL. } govern.
The rule, government, (immediate) dominion of God.

The trouble of this theocracy could not be thought so very great, to a multitude of coordinate deities when parcel'd out among them, but would rather seem to be but a sportful and delightful divertisement to each of them.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 208.

So that that which God here threatned was that he would put them in the same condition with other Gentile nations, who were subjected to the government of particular guardian angels; and so change their theocracy into angelocracy.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Thus the Almighty becoming their king, in as real a sense as he was their God, the republic of the Israelites was properly a theocracy; in which the two societies, civil and religious, were of course intirely incorporated.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 2.

These appear to me the true reasons of the theocratic form of government.—Id. Ib.

Temporal rewards and punishments administered by the THEO'GONY. Gr. Θεογονία, θεος, God, and γονος, generation.

The generation of the gods.

I imagine many of their descents were just as true as the theogony in Hesiod.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11. Selden. Illust.

We must needs pronounce of such theologues as these, who were theogonists, and generated all the gods (without exception) out of senseless and stupid matter, that they were but a kind of atheistical theologues or theological atheists.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 114.

I shall begin with the theogony, or generation of the gods, which Fabricius puts out of dispute to be of Hesiod; nor is it doubted, says he, that Pythagoras took it for his, who feigned he saw the soul of our poet in hell chained to a brazen pillar; a punishment inflicted on him for the stories he invented of the gods.

Cook. A Discourse on the Writings of Hesiod.

The invention of the Grecian theogony, the names, the honours, the forms, and the functions of the deities, may with propriety be ascribed to Hesiod and to Homer, who I believe lived four hundred years and not more before myself.—Beloe. Herodotus, b. ii. c. 53.

The exposition of this holy prayer, that is so excellent

This Lamfranke was an Italian borne, & was perfyte-ly lerned in the science of theologie or holy writte, and ryght apte in gouernynge of thynges bothe spyrituall and tempo-

The whole drift of the scripture of God, what is it but to teach theology? Theology, what is it, but the science of things divine? What science can be attained unto without the help of natural discourse and reason? Judge you of that which I speak, 1 Cor. x. 15.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politic, b. iii. § 8.

It is certain in all theology, that whatsoever is not of faith is sin, that is, whatsoever is done against our actual persuasion becomes to us a sin, though of itself it were not.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

But why should the sunne and moone bee angry, or take exceptions at mathematicians and philosophers? when as the like measure is offered unto God himselfe, by a company of theologasters.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 257.

Now it is very true that some Christian theologues also have made God to be All, according to these latter sences;
as when they affirm the whole world to be nothing else but Deum explicatum, God expanded or unfolded, and when they call the creatures, as St. Jerom and others often do, the rays of the Deity.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 307.

The old theologians and divines, who of all philosophers are most ancient, have put into the hands of the images of the gods, musical instruments, minding nothing else thereby, then to make this god, or that a minstrel, either to play on [the] lute, or to sound the flute, but because they thought there was no greater piece of work then Accord and Harmoniall symphonie could beseem the gods.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 858.

Some theologians have been employed to defile places erected only for religion and truth, by defending oppressions and factions; distaining their profession, and the good arts which they have learned, by publishing odious untruths, upon report and credit of others.

Hayward. Life of Edw. VI.

It seems most probable, that Orpheus himself wrote some philosophick or theologicke poems, though certain other poems might be also father'd on him, because written in the same strain of mystical and allegorical theology.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 297.

It is cited in the ordinary and authentick glosses, in the Catena's upon the gospels, in the decrees of the popes, and in the theological summs of great divines.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 2.

The archbishop of York reasoned theologically concerning his disobedience proceeding from the blindness of his understanding, and corruption of his mind.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1587.

It cannot be denied but that the Pagans did in some sence or other deifie or theologize all the parts of the world, and things of nature.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 509.

What great perfections can theologues reach,
Who learne their science as an art to gaine,
And, farre from practice, onely strive to preach?

Stirling. Domes-day. The Seventh House.

I mean theology, which, containing the knowledge of God and his creatures, our duty to him and our fellow creatures, and a view of our present and future state, is the comprehension of all other knowledge directed to its true end; i.e.
the honour and veneration of the Creator, and the happiness of mankind. This is that noble study which is every man's duty, and every one that can be call'd a rational creature is capable of.—Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 22.

He [Tipping] went to London, and spent some time in one of the inns of court, but his geny being theologically given, he retired to Oxon.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

He [Claymond] was a person of great gravity, of most exact example in his life and conversation, very charitable and devout, and had nothing wanting in him to compleat a theologist.—Id. Ib. vol. i.

A theologue more by need than genial bent;
By breeding sharp, by nature confident.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

He [Locke] endeavours to guard against theological choler, by urging, "that the great ends of morality and religion are well enough secured without philosophical proofs of the soul's immateriality, since it is evident, that he who made us sensible, intelligent beings can," and he adds, "will restore us to the like state of sensibility in another world."

Bolingbroke. Ess. On Human Knowledge, § 8.

It cost him, therefore, much less to invent final causes, and to expatiate theologically upon them, than it would have done to pursue the discovery of efficient causes by the slow and painful course of experiments.—Id. Ib. § 3.

I mean not to consider the theological opinions of Erasmus, but his learning and his genius; and of these I may venture to affirm, that if Erasmus had lived in an Augustan age, they would have advanced him to a rank among the best of the classics. But the theology and the theologians of hi-times were at open war with the graces of taste and elegance.—Knox. Ess. No. 132.

This sorely distresses our theologaster: yet, instead of humbling himself under the weight of his own dulness, he turns, as is his way throughout, to insult the author of The Divine Legation.

We shall not need to send you to the cels or cloysters for this skill; although it will hardly be believed, how far some of their contemplative men have gone in the theory hereof.

Bp. Hall. The Devout Soul, § 3.

Thus our English Columella might say with the poet, “—Monitis sum minor ipse meis”—none being better at the theory, or worse at the practise, of husbandry.

Fuller. Worthies. Essex.

I spent more oil and labour than ordinary in displaying the Greek tongue, because we are more beholden to her for all philosophical and theorick knowledge, as also for rules of commerce and commutative justice, than to any other.

strickest colledge of either university.

Bp. Hall. Specialities of his Life.

Attaining to great perfection in the theoretick and practical parts of those professions, he [John Tregonwell] was employed to be proctor for king Henry the eighth, in the long and costly cause of his divorce from queen Catherine.

Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

Your theories are here to practice brought,
As in mechanic operations wrought;
And man, the little world, before you set,
As once the sphere of chrystal show'd the great.

Dryden, Prolog. 4.

It may be proper to bear in mind that threefold method of commenting which St. Jerome lays down; namely, the historical, tropological, and theoretical; or, in more familiar terms, the literal, moral, and sublime.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 367.

The condition of a monarch, who is possessed but of one kingdom or province, is preferable to that of a geographer, though he be able to discourse theoretically of the dimensions, situation, and motion, or stability of the whole terrestrial globe.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 237.

Now theory is a general collection of inferences drawn from facts, and compressed into principles.

Parr. Sequel to a Printed Paper.

Weary with the pursuit of academical studies, he [Collins] no longer confined himself to the search of theoretical knowledge, but commenced the scholar of humanity, to study nature in her works, and man in society.

Langhorne. On Collins' Ode. The Manners.

If Captain Burney (who, by the testimony of his father, perhaps the greatest musical theorist of this or any other age, was able to have done it) had written down in European notes, the concords that these people sing.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 7. Note.

Our Lord and his apostles better understood the interests of society, and were more tender of its security and peace, than many, perhaps, of our modern theorists.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Such noble truths and theosophick mysteries are delivered

I would set down this, that there is a various intertex-ture of theosophical and philosophical truths, many physical and metaphysical theorems hinted to us ever and anon, though those words at first sight seem to bear but an ordinary gross sense.

More. Defence of the Literal Cabbala, Introd. § 6.

This disease [enthusiasm] many of your chymists and several theosophists, in my judgement, seem very obnoxious to, who dictate their own conceits and fancies so magisterially and imperiously, as if they were indeed authentick messengers from God Almighty.

Id. Discourse of Enthusiasm, § 43.

Many traces of the spirit of theosophism may be found through the whole history of philosophy; in which nothing is more frequent than fanatical and hypocritical preten-sions to divine illumination.

Enfield. History of Philosophy, vol. ii.

The theosophists—neither contented with the natural light of human reason, nor with the simple doctrines of Scripture, understood in their literal sense—have recourse to an internal supernatural light, superior to all other illuminations, from which they profess to derive a mysterious and divine philosophy, manifested only to the chosen favourites of heaven.—Id. Ib.

In the summer of that year, the thermometer in London

Fahrenheit) stood once at 78°; and the greatest height at which a thermometer of the same kind stood in the foregoing latter end of December, when the sun was within about three degrees of the vertex.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 5.

evoked and compelled to shew themselves to men for the purpose of purifying their souls.

Porphyry and some others did distinguish these two sorts, so as to condemn indeed the grosser, which they called magick or goetry; but allowed the other, which they termed theurgy, as laudable and honourable, and as an art by which they received angels, and had communication with the gods.
Yet St. Austin assures us they are both damnable.
Hallywell. Metam. (1682,) p. 51.

There is indeed mention made by the same Proclus, and others, of an opinion of irrational or brutish demons, or demoniack aerial brutes; of which he sometime speaks doubtfully, as if there be any irrational demons, as the theurgists affirm.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 864.

Neither is it to be questioned but that this divine magick of Zoroaster, shortly after degenerated in many of his followers, into the theurgical magick, and at length into

I conclude by saying, that from this conspiracy of philosophy and theology, in the establishment of theurgic and natural magick, have proceeded all the folly and knavery of judicial astrology, of horoscopes, of spells, &c. &c.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 2. On Human Reason, § 6.

If those [priests] of Egypt had taught nothing more than

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

THING. Dut. Dingh; Ger. Ding; Sw. Ting;
A.S. Thinc, thing; which Wachter, after Martinius, derives from thein, facere, to do; thing, that which is done. It appears from Wachter himself, that the Ger. Ding is of very various and extensive application, to any (thing) thought, said, or done; and Tooke considers thing to differ from think only in the final letter; and even this distinction is not preserved in certain provincial pronunciations. Bp. Hoper (he adds) wrote think.

Nothink is a vulgarism, but, like many others, it may have an effect in shewing the affinity of words. This word cannot be explained in its general signification, without the use, express or implied, of itself. Thing is,—

That which (aliquid), any (thing) which, we think, or which causes us to think; that which causes thought, sensation, feeling. It is usually contradistinguished from person, though sometimes applied emphatically to persons.

The universality of one name to many things, hath been the cause that men think the things are themselves universal; and so seriously contend, that besides Peter and John, and all the rest of the men that are, have been, or shall be in the world, there is yet something else that we call man, viz man in general deceiving themselves, by taking the universal, or general appellation, for the thing it signifieth.—Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 5.

Axiome! What ever things are in themselves, they are nothing to us, but so far forth as they become known to our faculties or cognitive powers.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 2. § 2.

Such ways of speaking, (sc. that fire is light and hot) though accommodated to the vulgar notions, without which, one cannot be well understood; yet truly signify nothing, but those powers, which are in things, to excite certain sensations or ideas in us. Since were there no fit organs to receive the impressions fire makes on the sight and touch; nor a mind joined to those organs, to receive the ideas of light and heat, by those impressions from the fire, or the sun, there would yet be no more light, or heat in the world, than there would be pain, if there were no sensible creature to feel it, though the sun should continue just as it is now, and Mount Ætna flame higher than ever it did.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 30.

You seem to forget, that it is some time since words have been no longer allowed to be signs of things. Modern grammarians acknowledge them to be (as indeed Aristotle called them, συμβολα παθημάτων) the signs of ideas: at the same time denying the other assertion of Aristotle, that ideas are the likenesses of things.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. i. c. 1.

This emperour was so thoughtful in the orderyng and teachyng of his children, that he would haue no woman, but if she were of l. yere of age at the leaste, &c.

The Golden Boke, c. 10.

The Democriticks and Epicureans did indeed suppose all humane cogitations to be caused or produced, by the incursion of corporeal atoms upon the thinker.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 761.

Gond. Is such a think as this allowed to live?

What power hath let thee loose upon the earth

To plague us for our sins.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman Hater, Act ii.

Having, is the measure of outward wealth; but it is thinking that must measure the inward thoughts, I say, of contentment, cheerefulness, and thankfulness, which if ye want, it is not either or both the Indies that can make you rich.—Bp. Hall. The Righteous Mammon.

It requires much care, and nice observation to extract and separate the precious oar from so much vile mixture; so that the understanding must be patient, and wary, and thoughtful in seeking truth.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

"Oh come, let us climb up to the hill, where God sees or is seen," saith devout Bernard. "O all ye cares, distractions, thoughtfulness, labours, pains, servitudes, stay ye here."—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Transfiguration of Christ.

Since he that rul'd, as it in right behou'd,
That all his subjects, as his children lou'd,
Finds you so thoughtlesse of him, and his birth.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

We know certainly by experience that we sometimes think, and thence draw this infallible consequence, that there is something in us that has a power to think: but whether that substance perpetually thinks or no, we can be no farther assur'd than experience informs us.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 1.

Tho thinking be suppos'd ever so much the proper action of the soul, yet it is not necessary to suppose that it should be always thinking, always in action.—Id. Ib.

He was able, here and there, to delude a superficial thinker with his new terms and reasonings: but the hardest task of all was, thoroughly to deceive him.

Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

I hope it will not be thought arrogance to say, that perhaps we should make greater progress in the discovery of rational and contemplative knowledg, if we sought it in the fountain, in the consideration of things themselves, and made use rather of our own thoughts than other mens to find it.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

But his meaning plainly is, to forbid such a care and concern for future accidents, as is attended with uneasiness, distrust, and despondency; such a degree of thoughtfulness, as takes up and defects, and distracts the mind.

Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

Just as a blockhead rubs his thoughtless skull,
And thanks his stars he was not born a fool.

Pope. Epilogue to Jane Shore.

Having indeed no suspicion that any stress at all could be laid upon it, but thinking rather that it had been carelessly or thoughtlessly put in by the author.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 48.

Thoughtfulness concerning our deportment, our welfare, that of others, and the public, so far as it will really be of use, is a duty of indispensable obligation.

Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

He who runs on thoughtlessly in the mad career of pleasure, can scarcely fail of losing his health.

Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 6.

Thoughtlessness and partiality may indeed dispose us to imagine, that however right in speculation the laws of religion and virtue may be, yet in practice great allowance is due to inclination; this being as truly part of our nature as reason.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

It may be necessary to inform those who are unacquainted with the disposition and habits of seamen, that they are so accustomed in ships of war to be directed in the care of themselves by their officers, that they lose the very idea of foresight, and contract the thoughtlessness of children.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 1.

Wiclif. Dedis, c. 20.

And there sate in a wyndow a certayne yonge man named Eutichus, fallen into a depe slepe. And as Paul declared, he was the more overcome with slepe, and fel downe from the thyrd loft.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Wherefore we cannot applaud Aristotle for this; but that which we commend him for, is chiefly these four things: first, for making a perfect incorporeal intellect to be the head of all; and secondly, for resolving that nature, as an instrument of this intellect, does not merely act according to the necessity of material motions, but for ends and purposes, though unknown to itself; thirdly, for maintaining the naturalty of morality; and lastly, for asserting the εφ' ημιν, autexousie, or liberty from necessity.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 55.

THIRL, v. A. S. Thirl-ian, (as now written,) to thrill, (qv.)

Men sayden eke, that Arcite shal not die,
He shal ben heled of his maladie.
And of another thing they were as fayn,
That of hem alle was ther non yslaine,
Al were they sore yhurt, and namely on,

Gascoigne. Jelosie.

My feareful flesh did tremble at their strife,
To see their blades so greedily imbrow,
That, dronke with blood, yet thristed after life.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

His office was the hungry for to feed,
And thirsty give to drinke; a worke of grace;
He feard not once himselfe to be in need,
Ne car'd to hoord for those whom he did breede.

Id. Ib. c. 10.

Though we cool our thirst at the mouth of the river, yet we owe for our draughts to the springs and fountains from whence the waters first came, though derived to us by the succession of a long current.

Bp. Taylor. On Set Forms of Liturgie, § 29.

Bp. Hall. The Hypocrite.

They who be athirst in the night, if they sleep upon it, lose their thirstiness, although they drink never a drop.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 599.

With these of old to toils of battle bred,
In early youth my hardy eyes I led:
Fir'd with the thirst which virtuous envy breeds,
And smit with love of honourable deeds.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Full on his foe his vengeful eyes he twin'd,
For blood he thirsted, and for conquest burn'd.

Fawkes. Appollonius Rhodius. Argon. b. ii.

The truce on equal terms at length agreed,
The waters from the watchful guard are freed:
Eager to drink, down rush the thirsty crowd,
Hang o'er the banks, and trouble all the flood.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

THIS. } A. S. Thysse, this, thes; Dut. Deese, THESE. } deeze; Ger. Dieser, diser, hic. Without an etymological meaning it is possible to give the usage only. It may be remarked that R.
Gloucester writes Thike; and that thick or thig, are still common in the Western parts of England.
The is from the-an; and thike from theg-an; the same word as the-an, with the insertion of the guttural g, and also written thicg-ean.

The, with the addition of es, (qv.) forms thees;
whence this. And this, with the same addition, forms thises; whence thise, and our common plurals these, those. P. Plouhman writes Thuse.

This is sometimes distinguished from that, as in the examples from Gower; it is also applied to something nearer or more approximate in space or time than that; it was formerly used with plural nouns. See Tooke, ii. 62. 8vo. ed. note; and the quotations from R. Gloucester.

Milton, Paradise Lost, b. i.

These fight like husbands, and like lovers those,
These fain would keep, and those more fain enjoy:
And to such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
Then whirl the wretch from high,
To bitter scorn a sacrifice,
And grinning infamy.
The stings of falshood those shall try,
And hard unkindness' alter'd eye,

 Torn and embarrass'd bleeds.—Somerville. The Chase, b. i.

Erasmus was born to cultivate the literæ humaniores, or the politer parts of learning; and I have often lamented, that he should have been diverted from those flowery paths into the rough and thorny roads of controversial divinity.

Knox. Ess. No. 132.

THOROUGH, prep. } Goth. Thairh; A. S. Thuruh, thurh; Dut. Deur, door; Ger. Durch; and in Lower Sax. Dur. (See Door.) Minshew and Junius both concur that Door, &c. are derived from the Gr. Θύρα. Skinner says—perhaps they are all from the Greek, or rather from Thor, thuruh, thurh. Thorough, he thinks, may be referred to the Gr. Τρυ-ειν, τρε-ειν, to bore, to perforate. Our English preposition Thorough, thourough, thorow, through, or thro', is no other than the Goth. substantive Dauro, or the Teutonic substantive Thuruh; and, like them, means door, gate, passage. "The Teutonic uses the same word Thurah, both for the substantive, (door;) and for what is called the preposition (Thorough.) The Dutch, which has a strong antipathy to our Th, uses the very word Door for both. The Anglo-Saxon, from which our language immediately descends, employs indifferently for door either dure or thure. The modern German (directly contrary to the modern English) uses the initial Th (thur) for our substantive (door), and the initial D (Durch) for our preposition (Thorough.)" See Tooke. Wachter thinks the nouns, Door, &c. are all from the Dutch preposition, Door.

Thorough is applied—to express passage, from one side, from one end to the other, from beginning to end; means, instrument of passage: generally, means, instrument, agent or agency;

passage ended, finished, complete: and hence thorough, adj.—

Finished, complete, perfect.

THOU. } See THY. Goth. Thu; A. S. Thu, THEE. } tu; Dut. Ger. and Sw. Du; Fr. Tu (tutoyer, to thou one, Cotgrave); It. and Sp. Tu;
 Lat. Tu; Gr. Συ.

Thou is commonly called a pronoun of the second person, and is used by the person speaking (the first person), for or instead of the name (the noun or nomen) of the person to whom he speaks.

The similarity between the Goth. Thu and Lat. Tu, and also between the Goth. Ich, ig, and the Gr. and Lat. Eg-o, deserves to be remarked.
 Each class had a common origin. See I and THE.

 Our most desired Hector, doest thou come?
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

O thou that with surpassing glory crown'd,
 Lookst from thy sole dominion like the God
 Of this new world; at whose sight all the stars
 Hide thir diminisht heads; to thee I call,
 But with no friendly voice, and add thy name
 O Sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams
 That bring to my remembrance from what state
 I fell, how glorious once above thy speare.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soule,
 Acknowledge him thy greater, sound his praise
 In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
 And when high noon has gain'd, and when thou fallst.
Id. Ib. b. v.

Phi. Know Pharamond,
I loath to brawl with such a blast as thou
Who art nought but a valiant voice: But if Thou shalt provoke me further, men shall say Thou wert, and not lament it.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act i.

Is it for thee the lark ascends and sings?
Joy tunes his voice, joy elevates his wings:
Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?
Loves of his own and raptures swell the note.

Pope. Ess. on Man, Ess. 3.

Thee therefore still, blameworthy as thou art,
With all thy loss of empire, and though squeez'd
By public exigence till annual food
Fails for the craving hunger of the state,
Thee I account still happy, and the chief Among the nations, seeing thou art free,
My native nook of earth.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

THOUGH. Goth. Thauh; A.S. Theah. Tho or though (or, as our country-folks more purely pronounce it), Thaf, thauf, and thof; is the imperative thaf or thaf-ig of the verb Thaf-ian, or thafig-an, to allow, permit, grant, yield, assent; and thaf-ig becomes thah, though, thoug (and thoch, as G. Douglas and other Scotch authors write it.) (See Tooke.) R. Gloucester writes, — Thogh; and R. Brunne, — Thof. See Hearn's Glossaries. See ALTHOUGH.

Thus in Wiclif: — "Though it behove: allow, grant it (as a necessary consequence) that I dye with thee, I shall not (on that account) deny thee." In Chaucer, — "Though that I speke: allow, grant, that I speke plainly; arette it not (rate, reckon it not) my villanie."

Thah my tonge were mad of stel,
And min herte yzote of bras,
The godness myght y never telle
That with Kyng Edward was.

Percy, vol. ii. Of the Death of Edw. I.

Petre seyde to him, yhe though it bihove that I dye with thee I schal not denye thee, also alle the disciplis seiden.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 26.

But if I do, though ye wolen not bileue to me, bileue ye to the werkis: that he knowe and bileue, that the Fadir is in me, and I in the Fadir. — Id. Jon, c. 10.

But yf I do, then though ye beleue not me, yet beleue the workes, that ye may knowe and beleue that the Father is in me, and I in hym. — Bible, 1551. Ib.

But firste I praie you of your curtesie,
That ye ne arette it not my villanie,
Though that I plainly speke in this matere,
To tellen you hir wordes and hir chere;
Ne though I speke hir wordes proprely.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 727.

For if the wolfe come in the waie
Their gostly staffe is then awaie,
Wherof thei shuld their flokke defende.
But if the poure shepe offende

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Sea Voyage, Act iv.

Bob. Well: I do no more than I have authority for: would I were away though. — Id. Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 2.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rowling in the fiery gulf, Confounded though immortal. — Milton. Par. Lost, b. i.

Of old, those met rewards who could excel,
And such were prais'd who but endeavour'd well:
Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too.

Pope. Ess. on Criticism.

But foolish man foregoes his proper bliss,
Ev'n as his first progenitor, and quits, Though plac'd in Paradise, (for Earth has still Some traces of her youthful beauty left,) Substantial happiness for transient joy.

Spar'd we our throates? the punishment we beare
Of others flight. May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vii.

What wonder if Achilles were misse-led,
Or great Alcides at their ladies sights,
Since these true champions of the Lord about
Were *thral*s to beauty, yeelden slaues to loue.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. v. s. 96.

But this the scope was of our former thought,
Of Sion's fort to scale the noble wall,
The Christian folke from bondage to haue brought Wherein alas, they long haue liued thral.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. i. s. 23.

Since he that ruld, as it in right behou'd,
That all his subiects, as his children lou'd,
Finds you so thoughtlesse of him, and his birth.
Thus men begin to say, ye rule in earth;
And grudge at what you let him vndergo;
Who yet the least part of his sufferance know:
Thral'd in an Iland; shipwrackt in his teares;
And in the fancies that Calypso beares,
Bound from his birthright.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.

Id. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

But, when by genial rays of summer sun
Purg'd of his slough, he nimbly thrids the brake, Whetting his sting, his crested head he rears Terrific. J. Philips. Cerealia.

Then notch'd the shaft, releas'd, and gave it wing;
The whizzing arrow vanish'd from the string,
Sung on direct, and threaded every ring.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

They disentangle from the puzzled skein,
In which obscurity has wrapp'd them up,
The threads of politic and shrewd design,
That ran through all his purposes, and charge
His mind with meanings that he never had,
Or, having, kept conceal'd.—Cowper. Task, b. iii.

— The threaded steel
Flies swiftly, and unfelt the task proceeds.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

— From hand to hand
Again, across the lines oft opening, glides
The thready shuttle, while the web apace
Increases, as the light of eastern skies,
Spread by the rosy fingers of the morn.

Dyer. The Fleece, b. iii.

There was much significance in his look with regard to the coat; it spoke of the sleekness of folly, and the thread-bareness of wisdom.—Man of Feeling, c. 21.

THREAP. A. S. Threap-ian, red-arguere, to reprove, to threapen. The word is still common in the north, (Somner,) where it is also used as equivalent to—

To urge, to press; and, as in Chaucer, to affirm.

To blame, rebuke, reprove, chide, (Brocket.)

Sol gold is, and Luna silver we threpe,
Mars iren, Mercurie quicksilver we clepe.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,294.

My foes they bray so loud, and eke threapen so fast
Buckled to do me scath, so is their malice bent.

But he go fro the gate fast,

Thei wolden hym take and set fast.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Yet so handled she the matter, that the threatness ever smarted in the threatners.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Which captaine also vsing to threaten the rest of his souldiers which staid behind vnder his obedience, and per-adventure (as it is to be presumed) were not so obedient to him as they should haue bene, was the cause that they fell into a mutinie, because that many times he put his threatnings in execution.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 317.

Hee spake thus against the king, in th' audience of manie, with a threatfull and prophetically spirit.

Holinshed. The Conquest of Ireland, c. 29.

Now to abstain from evil is the proper effect of fear, but to do good for fear of punishment is as improper as to threaten a man into love.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

Queen of this universe, doe not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die:
How should ye? by the fruit? it gives you life
To knowledge? by the threatner? look on mee,
Mee who have touch'd and tasted.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Hel. The honor sir that flames in your faire eyes

THRENE. } Lat. of Lower Ages, Threnus; THRE'NODY. } Gr. Θρηνος, lamentatio; from Θρεν-ew, ejulare, lamentari, to lament, to bewail. A few triplets follow the quotation from Shakespeare, entitled Threnos. Threnody, Gr. Θρηνωδία,—
A song of lamentation, or mourning.

Whereupon it made this threne
To the phoenix and the dove.

Shakespeare. The Passionate Pilgrim.

The birds shall mourn and change their songs into threnes and sad accents.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 1.

And if we observe the threnes and sad accents of the prophet Jeremy, when he wept for the sins of his nation; the heart-breakings of David, when he mourned for his adultery and murder; and the bitter tears of S. Peter, when he washed off the guild and baseness of his fall, and the denying his master; we shall be sufficiently instructed in this prelude or introduction to repentance.

Id. vol. ii. Ser. 5.

[They would] account it more eligible to live in the dismal clamour of hellish threnes and blasphemies, than to have a tedious din of heavenly praises and hallelujahs perpetually ringing in their ears.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 6.

They carry the body to the grave:—and for seven days the next of kin watch, to keep if possible the evil angel from his grave; incessantly warbling out elegiac threnodies, as the last expression of love they can shew.

Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 308.

THRESHOLD. A. S. Thersc-el, thyrsce-el, thersc- or thræsc-wald; Sw. Tröskel. Wachter and Junius derive from Thersc- or thresc-an, to thrash, to beat, (sc.) with the feet. The Dut. Drempel is from Trampeln, to trample. Wald (Junius) is the A. S. Wald, weald, silva, lignum: and the whole word is so applied, because—the (linen or) threshold is constantly beaten and trampled upon by the feet of those going in and out. It is applied generally to—

That on which we step under the gate or door.

And as she wolde over the threswold gon,
The markis came and gan hire for to call,
And she set down hire water-pot anon
Beside the threswold in an oxes stall.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8164.

No matron in a towred crowne, that led
The bride, forbid her on the threshold tread.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ii.

At length some pity warm'd the master's breast (Twas then his threshold first receiv'd a guest);
Slow creaking turns the door with jealous care,
And half he welcomes in the shivering pair.

Parnell. The Hermit.

The rayes or beames issuing from the eye of her, whom ye haue chosen, with the remembrance of her incomparable vertues, hath thrilled throughout the middes of my hart.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

Which when she sawe with sodaine glauncing eye,
Her noble heart, with sight thereof, was fild
With deepe disdain and great indignity,
That in her wrath she thought them both have thrild
With that selfe arrow which the carle had hild.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

Which whenas Scudamour did heare, his heart
Was thrild with inward griefe; as when in chace
The Parthian strikes a stag with shivering dart,
The beast astonisht stands in midst of his smart.

Id. Ib. c. 1.

Joy warms the cold and lifeless blood, and sends it about with a pleasant thrill through all the channels of its motion; and the enkindled spirit is ready to melt the gross mass that detains it from the adorable object of its love.

Glanvill, Ser. 7.

They understood well, that the dust of martyrs were the thrivingest seeds of Christianity.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 10.

—If I

Had seruants true about me; that bare eyes
To see alike mine honor as their profits, (Their owne particular thrifts); they would doe that
Which should undoe more doing.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

—Heare me great seed of Jove,

That ever dost my labours grace, with presence of thy love,
And all my motions dost attend; still love me (sacred dame)

Especially in this exploit, and so protect our fame,
We both may safely make retreat, and thriftily employ Our boldnesse in some great affaire, banefull to them of Troy.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

Acquainting men with good reason, to glory in thriftnesse

Holland. Plutarch, p. 977.

But if that anie other place you have,
Whiche asks small paines, but thriftnesse to save,
Or care to overlooke, or trust to gather,
Ye may me trust as your owne ghostly father.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Fell from high princes courtes or ladies bowres;
Where they in ydle pomp, or wanton play,
Consumed had their goods and thriftnesse houres,
And lastly thrown themselves into these heavystowres.

Id. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Among these the log-wood trees thrive best, and are very plentiful; this being the most proper soil for them: for they do not thrive in dry ground.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

The abundance of many of those, before whom I stand, is, I doubt not, owing to the church; I do not mean to the revenues of it; but to the pious care that their good fathers, more nearly sensible of their obligations in this respect than common parents, took of their education; and to the religious thriving principles, which they instilled into them.

Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

He had so well improved that little stock his father left,
as he was like to prove a thrifer in the end.—Hayward.

A careful shepherd not only turns his flock into a common pasture, but with particular advertence observes the thriving of every one.—Decay of Christian Piety.

Thus Heaven, though all-sufficient, shows a thrift
In his economy, and bounds his gift:
Creating, for our day, one single light;
And his reflection too supplies the night.

Dryden. Eleonora.

The ships crew were not so thrifty in bargaining (as they seldom are) as single persons, or a few men might be apt to be, who would keep to one bargain.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

To thrift and parsimony much inclin'd,
She yet allows herself that boy behind.—Cowper. Truth.

A time there was, when glory was my guide,
Nor force nor fraud could turn my steps aside;
Unaw'd by pow'r, and unappall'd by fear,
With honest thrift I held my honour dear.

Goldsmith. A Prologue.

They who are sparing in their younger days, seldom fail to be much more thrifty in their decline.

Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

Can he, who liv'd but in thy gracious smiles,
Who'd pine, if chance those smiles a single hour
Were dealt him thriftily; think, can he bear
The infamy of exile?

Mason. Elfrida.

Domestic industry and economy, or the qualities distinguished by the homely titles of thriftnesse and good house-wifery, were always, till the present century, deemed honourable.—Knox. Ess. No. 77.

Ray. What madness this! what thrifless waste of time!

The same to Cato; their dry throates were all
With dust besmeared.—May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

The conclusion of this rambling letter shall be a rhyme of certain hard throaty words which I was taught lately, and they accounted the difficultest in all the whole Castilian language.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 71.

So Hector, hereto throated threats, to go to sea in blood,
And reach the Grecian ships and tents; without being once withstood.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

They cut him vp; apart flew either thie;
That with the fat they dubbd, with art alone;
The throte-briske, and the sweet-bread pricking on.

Id. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

He said: both javelins at an instant flew;
Both struck; both wounded; but Sarpedon's slew:
Full in the boaster's neck the weapon stood.
Transfix'd his throat, and drank the vital blood.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Their language is in general guttural, and they express some of their words by a sound exactly like that which we make to clear the throat when any thing happens to obstruct it.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 5.

THROB, n. } Junius and Minshew derive THROB, v. } from the Gr. Θροβ-ειν, to THROBBING, n. } disturb. Skinner thinks it formed from the sound. It is perhaps from the
A. S. Threap-ian, to urge, to press.

To press or push; to beat or strike; to make frequent pulsations, or beats; to palpitate.

Tho marking him with melting eyes,
A thrilling throb from her heart did arise.

Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. May.

I saw a thousand huntsmen, which descended Downe from the mountaines bordering Lombardie,
That with an hundred speares her flank wide rended,
I saw her on the plaine outstretched lie,
Throwing out thousand throbs in her owne soyle.

Id. Visions of Bellay.

"Whome soone as I beheld, my hart gan throb
And wade in doubt what best were to be donne."

Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

As the heart is set in the midst of the body, and though it strikes to one side by the prerogative of nature, yet those throbs and constant motions are felt on the other side also, and the influence is equal to both: so it is in conjugal duties.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 17.

But past the sense of human miseries,
All tears are wip'd for ever from all eyes;
No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question, or a job.

Pope. Epilogue to Satires, Dial. 1.

Let us with silent footsteps go
To charnels and the house of woe,
To Gothic churches, vaults, and tombs,
Where each sad night some virgin comes,
With throbbing breast, and faded cheek,
Her promis'd bridegroom's urn to seek.

Warton. Ode to Fancy.

When with tumultuous throbs our pulses beat,
And dubious Reason totters on her seat,
The youth how steady, how resolv'd the guide
Which stems the full luxuriant, pleasing tide!

Thompson. The Wedding Morn.

—Why should I dread to own
The tender throbbings of my captive heart!
The melting passion which has long inspir'd
My breast for Eleonora, and implore
A parent's sanction to support my claim?

Smollett. The Regicide, Act i. sc. 3.

The glorious sceptre, and real majestee,
That hadde the king Nabuchodonosor,
With tonge unnetthes may described be.

Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14, 149.

By meane whereof he was there chosen pope about the
vii. day of May, and tronyed in the sayd moneth of May.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1343.

Now had the Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean where he sits High thron'd above all highth, bent down his eye
His own works and their works at once to view.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

—All heaven

Admiring stood apace, then into hymns
Burst forth, and in celestial measures mov'd,
Circling the throne and singing, while the hand
Sung with the voice.

Id. Paradise Regained, b. i.

—These two thrones except,
The rest are barbarous, and scarce worth the sight,
Shar'd among petty kings too far remov'd.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

He, whose all conscious eyes the world behold,
Th' eternal thunderer, sat thron'd in gold.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

It was towards the end of king William's reign, when all hopes of any surviving issue from any of these princes died with the duke of Gloucester, that the king and parliament thought it necessary again to exert their power of limiting and appointing the succession, in order to prevent another vacancy of the throne.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 3.

THRONG, v. } A. S. Thrang, from the verb THRONG, n. } Thring-an, "to press, squeeze THRO'NGING, n. } or thrust, to thrust together.
THRO'NGLY. } Chaucer useth thringing for thrusting, clustering together." (Somner.)

To press; to compress, to press together in close ranks, great numbers—busily, actively; to crowd, to swarm.

The brigge was brode & long, bothe of tre & stones,
Whan so mykelle throng was ther on at ones.

R. Brunne, p. 204.

And it bifelde the while he wente he was thrungun of the people.—Wiclif. Luk. c. 8.

And as he went the people thronged hym.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For there was many a bird singing,
Throughout the yerde all thringing.

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Whan Calcas knew this treatise should hold
In consistorie among the Greekes soone
He gan in thringe, forth with lordes old.

Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

The nobilitie of the suiter made them more desyrus to beholde. Wherefore as eche of them preased to be next Jesu, so was he payned with the thronging of the people.

Udal. Marke, c. 5.

Therewithall he bade that his camp should be fortified on all sides with a higher rampier, and the gates to be damed vp, & in doing therof to make hasty thronging and heauing and shoouing wyth as much pretence of feare as might bee.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 140.

Another time, he slept in the day time, insomuch as the Greeks who thronged about his pavilion doors, and gave long attendance, were displeased, and complained of him for it.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 338.

—To the place of game

These throng'd; and after, routs of other came,
Of all sort, infinite.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

For reported it is that being but a very child, in a great battell which was fought against the Latines and Tuscans together, he [Tarquinius] rode into the very throng of his enimies, and engaged himself.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 723.

This said, she swiftly went before, and he
Her steps made quides, and followd instantly,
When soone they reacht the Pylian thronges and seates,
Where Nestor with his sonnes sate.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

For God had so contriv'd by his infinite wisdom, that matter thus or thus prepar'd should by a vital congruity attract proportional forms from the world of life, which is every where nigh at hand, and does very throngly inequitate the moist and unctuous aire.

More. Philosophic Cabbala, c. 2. § 7.

Soon as the *throng*s in order rang'd appear,
And fainter murmurs dy'd upon the ear,
The king of kings his awful figure rais'd;
High in his hand the golden sceptre blaz'd.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

With words like these the troops Ulysses rul'd,
The loudest silenc'd, and the fiercest cool'd.
Back to th' assembly roll'd the thronging train,
Desert the ships, and pour upon the plain.

Id. Ib.

These people as soon as they saw us, thronged to the banks, and invited us on shore.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 4.

THROSTEL. A. S. Throstle, throste; dim. of Thrist, a thrush, (qv.)

Sire Thopas fell in love-longing
Al whan he herd the throstel sing,
And priked as he were wood.

Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas.

The throstel cok made eke his lay,
The wode dove upon the spray
He sang ful loude and clere.—Id. Ib.

"Te deum amoris" sang the thrustel cocke.

Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

How do the black-bird and the throssel with their melotious voices bid welcome to the chearful spring, and in their fixed months warble forth such ditties as no art or instrument can reach to.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 1.

The throstle is the finest of our singing birds, not only for the sweetness and variety of its notes, but for the long continuance of its harmony; for it obliges us with its song for nearly three parts of the year.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Throstle.

THRO'TTLE, n. } Throat-dæl, the dim. of THRO'TTLE, v. } throat.

To throttle,—to take, hold or seize, to press or compress the throat; and thus, to stop the breath;
to choak.

Where I haue come, great clearkes haue purposed
To grette me with premeditated welcomes;
Where I haue scene them shiuer and looke pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practiz'd accent in their feares,
And in conclusion, dumbly haue broke off,
Not paying me a welcome.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act v. sc. 1.

These things as he was belching forth with a blasphemous mouth, he was throttled with the halter, the multitude crying out to have the impious villain presently cut down.—Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1591.

As when earth's son Antæus (to compare Small things with greatest) in Irassa stroye
With Joves Alcides, and oft foil'd still rose,
Receiving from his mother Earth new strength,
Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple joynd,
Thrott'd at length in the air, expir'd and fell.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

At the upper extreame it [the bittor] bath no fit larinx, or throttle to quallifie the sound, and at the other end, by two branches deriveth itself into the lungs.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 27.

The throtling quincy 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism ascend to rack the joints.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

The laughing sot, like all unthinking men,
Bathes and gets drunk; then bathes, and drinks again:
His throat half throttled with corrupted phlegm,
And breathing through his jaws a belching steam.

Id. Persius, Sat. 3.

THROW, v. } A. S. Thraw-an, jacere, jac-
THROW, n. } tare, to hurle, to fling, THRO'WER. } (Somner.) To throw, seems THRO'WING, n. } equivalent to—THRO'WSTER. } To cast,—a word which it does not appear the A. S. possessed.

To cast, to fling, to hurl, to toss;—to heave.

With English prepositions adjoined—to throw,
(as to cast also) is equivalent to certain compounds of the Lat. Jacere. See To CAST.

Whan the com tham [they] blewe, the bestes ageyn fled,
The Scottis men doun threwe, for roryng wer thei dred.

R. Brunne, p. 118.

He throweth on his helme of huge weight,
And girt him with his swerde.

Chaucer. The Comp. of Mars & Venus.

He sighe the gates full of bloode,
Telegonus and where he stoode
He sighe also, but he ne knewe,
What man it was, but to hym threwe
His speare, and he sterte oute a side.

Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

This was the firste caste and throwe of his nette, wherin the fisher of mannes soule drew vp a great plenteous multitude.—Udal. Actes, c. 2.

—Nay, sometimes,

Like to a bowle vpon a subtle ground
I haue tumbled past the throw.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 2.

Fate (against thy better disposition)
Hath made thy person for the thrower-out [thrower]
Of my poore babe, according to thine oath.

Id. The Winter's Tale, Act iii. sc. 3.

The watchmen of the town also affirmed that they heard every night great stirs in Cuntius his house, the fallings and throwings of things about, and that they did see the gates stand wide open betimes in the mornings, though they were never so diligently shut o're night.

More. Antidote against Atheism, b. iii. c. 9.

Men may find matter sufficient to busy their heads, and employ their hands with variety, delight, and satisfaction;
if they will not boldly quarrel with their own constitution, and throw away the blessings their hands are fill'd with,
because they are not big enough to grasp every thing.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 1.

I have reason to complain of your not digesting your book better, and not throwing your disjointed materials into a more neat and regular order, after you had so long time for the compiling.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 408.

When Autumn's yellow lustre gilds the world,
And tempts the sickled swain into the field,
Seiz'd by the general joy, his heart distends
With gentle throws; and through the tepid gleams
Deep musing, then he best exerts his song.

Thomson. Autumn.

A woman's clack, if I have skill,
Sounds somewhat like a throwster's mill.

Swift. Complaint on his Deafness.

Throwsters is written throwers in the charter of incorporation of the silk throwsters.

Pegge. Anecdotes of the English Language.

THROW, n. In a throw, uno oculi conjectu seu nutu; in one throw or cast of the eye; in a nod, (Skinner;) in the time of an instantaneous action.
And Mr. Tyrwhitt,—time, a little time.

Now let us stint of Custance but a throw,
And speke we of the Romane emperour.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5373.

Thus starf this worthy mighty Hercules.
Lo who may trust on fortune any throw?

Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14, 141.

The mullok on an hepe ysweped was,
And on the flore ycast a canevas,
And all this mullok in a sive ythrowe,
And sifted, and ypicked many a throwe.

Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16, 406.

THR

And eke the vice of pride eschewe,
Wherof the glorie is false and vaine,
Whiche God him selfe hath in disdaine:
That though it mount for a throwe,
It shall downe fall and ouerthrowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

THRUM, v. } Lye says,—"the end or THRUM, n. } extremity of a web;" and THRU'MBLE, v. } refers to the Isl. Thraum, THRU'MMING, n. } the extremity or end. Cot-THRU'MMY. } grave has,—thrombes de sang, clots or clusters of congealed blood. Skinner says,—perhaps from the A.S. Trum, ge-trum, a knot; or (he adds) from the Ger. Trucken, to thrust. The A.S. Trum is probably from the verb trymman, firmare, confirmare, roborare, to render firm or strong, to strengthen; and hence, to thrum may be,—

To knot, tie, or fasten; to twist or twine together; to weave; to dress or work with thrum, or any thing interwoven or matted together; to thicken; to close or crowd together; to compress, to collect.

Which bears a grass as soft, as is the dainty sleeve,
And thrumm'd so thick and deep, that the proud palmed deer

Forsake the closer woods, and make their quiet leir
In beds of platted fog, so eas'ly there they sit.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23.

Mertilla. O I could wish this place were strew'd with roses,
And that this bank were thickly thrum'd with grass
As soft as sleeve or sarcenet ever was,
Whereon my Cloris her sweet self reposes.
Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 4.

And almost all moss hath here and there little stalks, besides the low thrum.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 357.

And let it nere be said for shame, that we the youths of London,
Lay thruming of our caps at home, and left our custom undone.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act iv.

Iag. Upon my little honesty, your mistriss,
If I have any speculation, must think
This single thrumming of a fiddle,
Without a bow, but even poor sport.
Id. The Woman's Prize, Act i. sc. 1.

If men should ever be thrumming [thrumming] the drone of one plain song, it would be a dull opiat to the most wakeful attention.

Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Defence.

Semblably do wicked and leud folke, who gather, thrumble, and heape up together all sorts of gaine, all actions that be in their way, it makes no matter what.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 213.

Hunger thrumbleth us together like a sort of dogs, bringeth us again into a decent order.—Id. Ib. p. 592.

In the middle stands a Columella thick set with thrummy
apiculæ, which argue this plant belong to the malvaceous kind.—Dampier. Voyages, vol. iii. Plants in Brazil.

"Oh! how I long, how ardently desire,
To view those rosy fingers strike the lyre?
For late, when bees to change their climes began,
How did I see them thrum the frying-pan."
Shenstone. Colemira.

The ends are eight or nine inches long, hanging out on the upper side, like the shag or thrum matts, which we sometimes see lying in a passage.
Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 9.

THRUSH. This word is not found in older lexicographers, Minshew, Skinner, or Junius.
The etymology is unsettled; "from thrust, a breaking out," (Dr. Johnson.) Perhaps merely a throw or throe.

An ejection, an eruption.

A thrush; by this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first on the mouth . . . They proceed from the obstruction of the emissaries of the saliva . . . The viscous matter is to be pushed out.
Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 3.

THRUSH. Dut. Droessel, droestel; Ger.
Trostel; A.S. Thrisc, throstle. See THROSTLE.

This countrey is of better temperature then any other that can be seene, and very hote. There are many thrushes, stockdoves, and other birds.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 206.

Now whenas Calepine was woxen strong,
Upon a day he caste abrode to wend,
To take the ayre and heare the thrushes song.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

Udal. Matthew, c. 3.

The sergeant of my band tooke his sword in his hand, saying, that with the point thereof he had thrust through two Indians which ranne into the woods.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 327.

"Night! thou fowle mother of annoyaunce sad,
Sister of heauie Death, and nurse of Woe,
Which wast begot in heaven, but for thy bad
And brutish shape thrust downe to hell below."
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

[Melanthius] being asked upon a time how Alexander his good lord and master was murdered, Mary with a thrust

Bp. Taylor. The Real Presence, § 4.

I have sufficiently declar'd the negative already, by re-proving the great ground of that practice, I mean the thrusting the two commandments together.
Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

The operation of nature is different from mechanism, it doing not its work by trusion or pulsion, by knockings or thrustings, as if it were without that which it wrought upon.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 156.

This thrusts amid the throng with furious force;
Down goes, at once, the horseman and the horse:
That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And, floundering, throws the rider o'er his head.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

He next his fauchion try'd, in closer fight;
But the keen fauchion had no power to bite,
He thrust; the blunted point return'd again.
Id. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

THRUST, i.e. Thirst.

Thunders are nothing els but the blows and thumps given by the fires beating hard upon the clouds: and therefore presently the fiery chinkes and rifts of those clouds do glitter and shine. Possible it is also, that the breath and wind elevated from the earth, being repelled backe, and kept downe by the starres, and so held in, and restrained within a cloud, may thunder, whiles nature choketh the rumbling sound, all the while it striveth and quarrelleth;
but sendeth forth a cracke when it breaketh out, as wee see

Of Pow'r, that proudly sits on others' crimes.

Daniel. To the Countess of Cumberland.

Her, and her thunder-fearless verdant bayes.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Moral Representations.

A master of philosophy travelling with others on the way, when a fearful thunder-storm arose, checked the fear of his fellows, and discoursed to them of the natural reasons of that uproar in the clouds.

Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, b. i. § 6.

Hoarse murmurs of the main from far were heard,
And night came on, not by degree, prepar'd,
But all at once; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll, the forkie lightning flies.

Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

His vows, in haughty terms, he thus prefer'd,
And held his altar's horns: the mighty thunderer heard.

Id. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

Whirlwinds and thunderous storms his chariot drew
'Tween worlds and worlds, triumphant as it flew.

Brome. Paraphrase of Job.

Tupia was therefore ordered to acquaint them that we had weapons which, like thunder, would destroy them in a moment.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

To shake thy senate, and from heights sublime
Of patriot eloquence to flash down fire
Upon thy foes, was never meant my task:
But I can feel thy fortunes, and partake
Thy joys and sorrows, with as true a heart
As any thund'rer there.

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

THURIBLE. } Thurible, a vessel in which THURIFICATION. } to put, to burn (thus) incense.
Thurification,—burning incense.

The way of thurification.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

And upon the shekel of the sanctuary was impress'd the image of Aaron's rod and a pot of manna, or thurible.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

[The Christian souldiers] when they found themselves by an ignorant mistaking drawn, under a pretence of loyalty, into so much ceremony as might carry some semblance of an idolatrous thurification, ran about the city in an holy remorse, and proclaim'd themselves to be Christians.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Disc. 3. Case 3.

THURROK. Also written Thorruke. Dut.
Dorck or durck, sentina, (Kilian.) Mr. Tyrwhitt says it is a Saxon word, which the Glossaries render cymba. "It seems," he adds, "to have signified any sort of keeled vessel, and from thence, what we call the hold of the ship." He produces the extract from Our Ladyes Mirroure, and acknowledges that he knows not what to make of hamron. Tooke states—thorruke—to be door, (gate, passage;) he quotes the first passage from Chaucer only. It seems equivalent to our usage of draught, (Matt. c. 15; Mark, c. 7.)

Ye shall understande that there ys a place in the bottome of a shyppe, wherin ys gathered all the fylthe, that cometh into the shyppe—and it is called in some contre of thys londe a thorrocke. Other calle it an hamron, & some call it the bulcke of the shyppe.

Our Ladyes Mirroure, (London, 1530, fol. 57.)

Then cometh idelnesse that is the gate of all armes. This idelnesse is the thurrok of all wicked and vilains thoughtes.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The same harme do somtime the smal dropes of water,

the bottom of the ship, if men ben so negligent, that they discharge hem not by time.—Id. Ib.

THURSDAY. Thor, an old Saxon deity, to whom the fifth day of the week was sacred;
thence called Thorsdag, now Thursday.

On a Thursday at nyght at euen he gede to reste,
To hunt there he had tight in his new foreste.

R. Brunne, p. 93.

Of the weekly day which was dedicated unto his peculiar service, we yet retain the name of Thursday, the which the Danes and Swedians doe yet call Thors-day, in the Netherlands, it is called Dunders-dag, which being written according to our English orthography, is Thunders-day, whereby it may appeare that they antiently therein intened, the day of the god of thunder; and in some of our old Saxon bookes I find it to have bene written Thunres-deag. So as it seemeth that the name of Thor or Ther was abbreviated of Thunre, which we now write thunder.

To Thebes, with his olde walles wide.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1879.

And thus came firste to mans ere
The feith of Christe and all good,
Through them that then were good,
And sobre, and chaste, and large, and wise.

Gower. Con. A. Prol.

My right hand then she toke, and held it fast,
And with her rosie lips thus did she say:
Son, what furie hath thus prouoked thee
To such vntamed wrath?—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

— Thus it shall befall

Him who to worth in women overtrusting
Lets her will rude: restraint she will not brook,
And left to her self, if evil thence ensue,
Shee first his weak indulgence will accuse.

fight, or to bee well reputed, as our thwartness grammarians would with their subtile sophistrie seeme to etymologize and derive it.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 3.

Can any man be so unreasonable as to defend it lawfull, upon some unkind usages, or thwartness of disposition, for a parent to abandon and forsake his child; or the son to cast off his parent?—Bp. Hall. Cases of Consc. Dec. 4. Case 2.

He [Whitaker] sent to the archbishop, vindicating his own sentiments to be consonant to the doctrine of the church of England, in her avowed articles, and urging that the Lambeth articles were not to be understood so as to thwart the old articles of the church.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 379.

If it be sensuality we must starve it out by prudent fasting and abstinence; if devilishness, we must force it out by thwarting and contradicting it in the course of our practice, and keep it at the greatest distance from it.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 1.

E'en at thy altars whilst I took my stand,
The pen of truth and honour in my hand,
Fate, meditating wrath 'gainst me and mine,
Chid my fond zeal, and thwarted my design.

They who are naturally enclined and disposed to laughter, are to avoid and decline the ticklings and soft handling in those parts of the body that are most smooth, sleecke and tender, which soon yielding and relenting to those light touches, stirre up and provoke immediately that passion of laughing.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 255.

For all tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, and suddenness, and rareness of touch, do further: for we see, a feather, or a rush, drawn along the lip or cheek, doth tickle; whereas a thing more obtuse, or a touch more hard, doth not.

The sounds are fine and smooth, the sense is full and strong;
Not bombasted with words, vain ticklish ears to feed,
But such as may content the perfect man to read.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

For who knoweth not, that in frost it is ticklish meddling with vines, and that they be in daunger soone to breake and knap asunder.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

If a person be very ticklish, and you but gently stroke the sole of his foot with the top of a feather, that languid impression on the bottom of the foot shall, whether he will or no, put all those muscles and other parts into motion, which are requisite to make that noise, and to exhibit that shape of the face (so far distant from the feet) which we call laughing; and so the gentle motion of a straw, tickling the nostrils, is able to excite sneezing.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 176.

The common nature of men disposeth them to be credu-lous, when they are commended, or receive any signification of esteem from others: every ear is tickled with this sweet music of applause.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

If by chance there be some few [persons in China] unhappy enough not to find ticklers, or some ticklers clumsy enough not to find business, they comfort themselves at least with self titillation.
Chesterfield. Fog's Journal, No. 377.

He hath the most ticklish things that can be (the rights and interests, the opinions and humours of men) to manage.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

"The cunning old pug, ev'ry body remembers,
That when he saw chestnuts a roasting i' th' embers,
To save his own bacon, took puss's two foots,
And so out o' th' embers he tickled his nuts."
Byrom. A Letter to R. L. Esquire.

Is't not a pity now, that tickling rheums
Should ever tease the lungs and blear the sight Of oracles like these?
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

Their reading, like their diet, may be light, and more adapted to tickle a sickly palate, than to afford solid and substantial nourishment.—Knox. Ess. No. 153.

TICKTACK. Dut. Tick-tacker, tick-tack-berd, a chess-board; Fr. Tric-trac, the inside or playing side of a pair of tables; the tables themselves.
The game (tick-tack) at tables; also, the clattering noise made by the tablemen, &c. (Cotgrave.) It.
Tricche tache.

And that those pretended tumults were chastiz'd by their own army for new tumults, is not prov'd by a game at tic-tac with words; tumults and armies, armies and tumults, but seems more like the method of a justice irrational than divine.—Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 26.

TID

TIDE, n. "A. S. Tid, tempus, hora, a TIDE, v. time, a season, an heure. Germ.
TIDEFUL. } Zeyt; Belg. Tiid. Hence happily our tide, for the ebbing and flowing of the sea at certain houres or seasons, according to the course of the moone," (Somner.) In A. S. Tid- an; Dut. Tyden, tyen; Ger. Ziehen; and in Goth.
Tiuhan, ire, proficisci, to go or come, to move.

Tide,—the moment when, or at which, any thing comes or goes, happens, takes place or befals; time, season.

Tide of the sea,—time or season of ebb or flow;
(met.) motion or commotion, (like the tide,) flood, stream, current.

Tyde, v. in R. Gloucester,—tidde, in Chaucer,— to come to, to have the hap or chance. (See BETIDE.) To move as the sea, or tide of the sea, (Feltham, &c.)

Tide is frequently conjoined to the preceding word:—morrowtide, noontide, eventide, &c.

Ac after mete, tho he adde yete & ydronek wel,
He nom on of hys priues, that het Water Tyrel,
And a uewe othere of hys men, & nolde non lenger abyde,
That he nolde to hys game, tyde wat so bytyde.
R. Gloucester, p. 418.

Lo an erthetillier abidith precious fruyt of the erthe, paciencie suffrynge til he resseyue tideful and lateful fruyt.
Wiclif. James, c. 5.

But whanne the morowetide was come alle the princis of Jhesus.—Id. Matthew, c. 27.

For by my trouth in love I durst have sworn,
Thee should never have tidde so fair a grace,
And wost thou why? for thou were wont to chace
At love in scorne.—Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

For he bath than at all tide,
Of loue suche maner pride,
Him thinketh his loue is endeles—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

She wolde in Isis Temple at eue
Upon hir gods grace abide,
To seruen him the nightes tide.—Id. Ib.

Circes to swolle bothe sides,
He lefte, and waiteth on the tides,
And straught through out the salte some
He taketh his cours, and comth hym home.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

The situaciō of the townes for the most part was such,
that being set in thuttermost nookes and mountaines reaching into the sea, there was no comming to theym on foote, by reason of the rysing of the tydes, which euer happened twice in twelue houres space.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 72.

But this good knight, soon as he them can spie
For the cool shade him thither hastily got.
There they alight in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

As when two barks, this caried with the tide,
That with the wind, contrary courses sew,
If wind and tide doe change, their courses change anew.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 9.

As when strong windes with tydes repugnant mette,
One way the sea, the waues another go,
These ships vpon the furrow'de ocean so Make different tracts.—May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iii.

And now the top of hills as rocks appear;
With clamor thence the rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea thir furious tyde.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

They that are tyded down the stream of loosenesse, have much the advantage of those that follow goodnesse.
Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 8.

By tides I mean flowings and ebbings of the sea, on or off from any coast. Which property of the sea seems to be universal, though not regularly alike on all coasts, neither as to time nor the height of the water.
Dampier. Voyages. Of Tides & Currents.

His heart impetuous in his bosom boild
And, justled by two tides of equal sway,
Stood, for a while, suspended in his way.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and, rudely thrown ashore,
Lie impotent, nor can themselves restore.
Id. Persius, Sat. 6.

Arim. Fortune seems weary grown of Aurenge-Zebe,
While to her new made favourite, Morat,
Her lavish hand is wastfully profuse;
With flame and flowing honour tided in Born on a swelling current smooth beneath him.
Id. Aurenge-Zebe, Act iii.

TIDINGS. Dut. Tydinghe; A. S. Tid-an, to come, to come to, to come to pass, to happen.

Any thing happening, or that has happened; a tale, story, narrative of such things; news.

Our frailty can sustain, thy tydings bring,
Departure from this happy place.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

"Griev'st thou for me, or for my martial band?
Or some sad tidings from our native land?
Our fathers live (our first, most tender care)
Thy good Menætiæ breathes the vital air,
And hoary Peleus yet extends his days;
Pleas'd in their age to hear their children's praise."
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

— When presumptuous Spain
Baptiz'd her fleet invincible in vain;
Her gloomy monarch, doubtful and resign'd
To every pang that racks an anxious mind,
Ask'd of the waves, that broke upon his coast,
What tidings? and the surge replied—"All lost!"
Cowper. Expostulation.

TIDY. From A. S. Tid, time or season; Dut.
Tydelick. Tidlic, seasonable, in good time; and as in Wiclif, tideful. See TIDE.

Timely, seasonable; suited, prepared, dressed for the season; ready, in due order, orderly, neat.

Tid, in the North, (Grose,) is—lively, sprightly; and tidy, small. The Glossary to G. Douglas says—handy, adroit; and in these applications Doll Tearsheet may be intended to use the word.

A tid-bit is yet common in speech for—a delicate little bit.

Ac sedes that ben sowen, and mowe suffre wyntres
Aren tydyor and tower [tougher].
Piers Ploukman, p. 211.

Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iv. sc. 2.

For, as I think, there was never man yet hop'd for Either constancie, or secrecie, from a woman,
Unless it were an ass ordain'd for sufferance;
Nor to contract with such can be a tial.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act ii. sc. 1.

The Patriarchs had a religious care to recall the propinquity which was dividing and separating too fast; and as it were, to bind it by the ties of marriage, and recall it when it was flying away.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

And thereunto a great long chaine he tight,
With which he drew him forth, even in his own despiht.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 12.

And all around were nuptial bands, the ties,
Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

Whether the natural cause of these ideas, as well as of that regular dancing of his fingers, be the motion of his animal spirits, I will not determine, how probable soever, by this instance, it appears to be so: but this may help us a little to conceive of intellectual habits, and of the tying together of ideas.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 33.

Our people eagerly seized these glittering habits, and put them on over their own dirty trowsers and jackets, not forgetting at the same time the tye or bag-wig and laced hat, which were generally found with the cloaths.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 6.

The Indians saw him stripped and tied up to the rigging with a fixed attention, waiting in silent suspense for the event.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 10.

One of those boys, who loved to play with his companions, observed that, by tying a string from the handle of the valve which opened this communication to another part of the machine, the valve would open and shut without his assistance, and leave him at liberty to divert himself with his play-fellows.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 1.

Even they who profess a high regard to morals, and in some instances appear to feel it, have too commonly no feeling at all of the strongest moral tie which can be, that which binds us to our Maker.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 27.

A pragmatist pleader, as soon as he has thrown a tie-wig over his toupee, [is equalled] to a Coke or a Littleton.
Knob. Winter Evenings, Even. 40.

TIER. Fr. Tiere, tieire. Rank, place, order, &c. (Roquefort.) Dut. Tuyer, series longa rerum connexarum, (Kilian;) a long row or rank of things fastened or tied together; Dut. Tuyer, from the verb Tuy-eren, to tie. Generally,—
A row, a rank, a line.

— For in view
Stood rankt of seraphim another row
In posture to displode thir second tie
Of thunder.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Their pots [are] some higher in a tire than others, ours drawn upon an equal line.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

They bring nothing else but jars of wine, and they stow one tier on the top of another so artificially, that we could hardly do the like without breaking them.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

There run a cross the outlayers two tire of beams for the padlers to sit on, on each side the vessel.—Id. Ib. an. 1686.

TIG

A succession of crops [of the teeth] is provided, and provided from the beginning; a second tier being originally formed beneath the first, which do not come into use till several years afterwards.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 14.

TIERCE. Fr. Tiers. See TERCE.

TIFF, n. A drink; perhaps corrupted from tip, i. e. tipple, tip, tiph, tiff.

— As the conduits ran
With claret at the coronation,
So let your channels flow with single tiff,
For John, I hope, is crown'd.—Corbet. On John Dawson.

Your next is money, which I promise,
Full fifty pounds, alas! the sum is;
That too shall quickly follow, if
It can be rais'd from strong or tiff.
Brome. The Answer to his University Friend.

But I, whom gripping Penury surrounds,
And Hunger, sure attendant upon Want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,
(Wretched repast!) my meagre corpse sustain.
J. Philips. The Splendid Shilling.

TIFF, v. Fr. Tifer, atifer, to deck, prank, trick, trim, adorn. Of uncertain etymology. See Menage.

To deck, or decorate.

When she sets down to her toilet unnumbered treasures ope at once. What opes the treasures? why the maid, with her hands, not with her desire of tiffing out her mistress in a killing attire.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 5.

Is the miss under a force when she culls among her trinkets with curious toil to tiff herself out in the most engaging manner, or teazes pappa for money to buy a new fashioned silk?—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

TIFFANY. The thinnest and softest of silks, (says Skinner,) from the Fr. Tiffer, (see TIFF,) to adorn; because silk is suited for shew and ornament.

Her snowy breasts their whitenesse did display
Thorough the thinn Sidonian tiffenay
Wrought, and extended by the curious hand
Of Ægypt's workemen.—May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

And surely she [a woman in Coos named Pamphila] is not to be defrauded of her due honour and praise, for the invention of that fine silke, tiffanie, sarcenet, and cypres, which instead of apparell to cover and hide, shew women naked through them.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 22.

TIGER. } Fr. Tigre; It. and Sp. Tigre;
TIGRESS. } Lat. Tigris. The animal, as well
TIGRISH. } as the river, are said to be so named from their swiftness. Tigris, "in the Median's language, betokeneth a shaft," (sagittam),—Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 87.

That ther n'is tigre, ne no cruel best,
That dwelleth other in wood, or in forest,
That n'olde han wept, if that he wepen coude,
For sorwe of hire, she shrighit alway so loude.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10, 33.

Some parte thei shopen in to bestes,
Some parte thei shopen in to foules,
To beres, tygres, apes, oules.
Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Let this thought thy tigrish courage pass.
Sidney. Astroph. & Stella.

Tygres are bred in Hircania and India: this beast is most dreadful for incomparable swiftnesse, and most of all it is in the taking of her young: for her litter (whereof there is a great number) by the hunters is stolne and carried away at once, upon a most swift horse for the purpose; lying in wait to espie when the dam is abroad: and shifteth this bootie from one fresh horse to another, riding away upon the spur as hard as they can. But when the tigress commeth and finds her nest and den empty (for the male tigre hath no care nor regard at all for the young) she runnes on end after her young ones, and followeth those that carried them away, by the sent of their horse footing.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 18.

Then as a tyger, who by chance hath spi'd
In some purlieu two gentle fawnes at play, Strait couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both Grip't in each paw.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

TIGHT. } From the Ger. Dicht, and TIGHTLY. } that from the Lat. Tectum, TIGHTNESS. } (Skinner.) Tight is used, by TIGHTEN, v. } Spenser, as the regular past part. of tie, (qv.); and Tooke forms it thus,—Tied, tied, tight. Beaum. & Fletch. write tith, (qv.) fast or fixed; close, strict, compressed, compact; compressed into form or shape: opposed to—loose, slovenly, lazy;—neat, brisk, handy, active.

TIL

In this synod there was great stir to restore the abandoned doctrines again, and especially those of the mass; yet some few learned and good men of the reformation here shewed themselves, that tightly disputed these opinions with them.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Mary I. (1553.) c. 4.

As some tight vessel that holds out against wind and water, so did Ruth against all the powers of a mother's persuasions.—Bp. Hall. Naomi & Ruth.

Where he has paid me titely, paid me home mistriss.
Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act v. sc. 2.

But my dear Jewstrump, for thou art but my instrument, I am the plotter, and when we have cozen'd 'em most titely, thou shalt steal away the inn-keeper's daughter.
Id. The Fair Maid of the Inn, Act ii.

While they are among the English they wear good cloaths, and take delight to go neat and tight.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

Know, that whenever I think fit
To tame thee with the galling bit,
Just where I please, with tighen'd rein,
I'll urge thee round the dusty plain.
Fawkes. Anacreon, Ode 59.

The remaining part of their dress consists of a pair of tight trowsers, or long breeches, of leather, reaching down to the calf of the leg.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 7.

Placed so tightly, as to squeeze myself in half my natural dimensions; and I sweated myself every day between two feather beds till I was ready to faint.
Knob. Winter Evenings, Even. 58.

Near four thousand inhabitants, of which a thousand are supposed to live in the city of San Ignatio de Agana, where the governor generally resides, and where the houses are represented as considerable, being built with stone and timber, and covered with tiles, a very uncommon fabric for these warm climates and savage countries.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 6.

TILL. A. S. Til, which (Tooke thinks) is formed by the coalescence of the two A. S. words To-hwile; i. e. to and while, i. e. time. From morn till night, is no more than—"From morn to time night:" but even in our oldest writers, till is applied to place as well as time; as, "he fled till Ireland," "they gon til Athenes;" and is used, as in other cases, as equivalent to to—"He spake to the chevalree;" "turned til a bere." Wiclif uses the strong pleonasm tilto (i.e. to while to,) and til into. To while, may be the words of which till is compounded; and time included in it, may have been lost sight of; and, thus, the whole word used as equivalent to one of its parts only. In vulgar speech this usage is now not rare; as, "I sent till him."

To while or time.

And in the likenes of a beaste
Of gras shall be thy roiall feaste.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

So strange thy outery, and thy words so strange
Thou interposest, that my sudden hand
Prevented spares to tell thee yet by deeds
What it intends; till first I know of thee
What thing thou art, thus double form'd, and why
In this infernal vaile first met thou call'st
Me father, and that fantasm call'st my son?
I know thee not, nor ever saw till now
Sight more detestable then him and thee.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Powers act but weakly and irregularly, till they are heightened and perfected by their habits.

South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

The notice which you haue been pleased to take of my labours, had it been early, had been kind; but it has been delayed, till I am indifferent and cannot enjoy it; till I am Plouhman*. And see TELL.) In R. Gloucester, tilleth is,—moveth, goeth, travelleth, proceedeth.

To till the earth is,—to raise, lift, turn it (sc.
with the plough, spade, &c.); and thus to cultivate it. In Gower, the craft of plough tilling is—the craft of lifting up, turning the earth with the plough.

Tilth,—any manner of operation, which tilleth or turneth up, or raiseth the earth; also applied to the land when tilled.

To till a snare,—to set it up, to raise it; to set a toil. See TOIL.

abundantly with corne in their iourneye.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 3.

When they came once to be fixed in the land of promise, their angelicall sustenance ceased; they then must purvey for their own food, and either till, or famish.

Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, b. i. § 8.

But for what cause I cannot tell

He cannot pipe nor sing:

Nor knows he how to digge a well,

Nor neatly dress a spring,

Nor knows a trap nor snare to till.

Browne. Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 2.

In one place he [good steward] layeth up the instruments and tools for tillage and husbandry, and in another part from the rest, he bestoweth weapons, armour, and furniture for the wars.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 111.

The monarch's daughter there (so Jove ordain'd)

He won and flourish'd where Adrastus reign'd;

There, rich in fortune's gifts, his acres till'd;

Beheld his vines their liquid harvest yield,

And numerous flocks that whiten'd all the field.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

— Each grain and seed, consum'd in earth,

Raises its store, and multiplies its birth,

And from the handfull, which the tiller sows,

The labour'd fields rejoyce, and future harvest flows.

Prior. Solomon, b. i.

But search her cabinet, and thou shalt find

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

The very ground you cultivate, affords much instruction.
Without proper tillage you know, it will bear nothing; and the more it is cultivated, the more it will produce.

Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 20.

Though nature weigh our talents, and dispense

To ev'ry man his modicum of sense,

And conversation in its better part

May be esteem'd a gift, and not an art,

Yet much depends, as in the tiller's toil,

On culture, and the sowing of the soil.

Cowper. Conversation.

This afternoon, we set up the armourer's forge, to repair the braces of the tiller which had been broken.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

O'er tæe rough tilth he cast his eyes around,
And soon the plough of adamant he found,
And yokes of brass.

TILT, v. } Tilled, tild, tilt, past part. of the TILT, n. } verb Tilian, to raise, to lift up.
See Tooke.

The raised cover of a boat or waggon.

To tilt a vessell, (properly,) to till it, is—to raise it, (Skinner, and Tooke.)

To run at tilt—(hastis ludere,) Minshew derives from the Dut. Tillen, levare, loco movere, or from the verb to tell, because all the strokes are told or numbered, (See TELL.)—Each (says Skinner) too forced: and he prefers the A. S. Tealtrian, to totter, to nod, from the motion of the combatants in their saddles, while engaged.

To run at tilt is perhaps merely, (hastis elevatis,) with spears tilted or upraised; for so the combatants entered the field:—(met.) with the force or speed of a combatant at tilt.

To ride tilting, is—to ride surging, rising as the waves rise.

Here graued is a good and godly wight,
That yeilded hath hir cynders to the soyle,
Who ran hir race in vertues tylt aright,
And neuer had at Fortunes hande the foyle.

Turberville. An Epitaph on Dame Elyz. Arhundle.

At a tilting in Iberia, where I was born, dedicated to the memory of the queen Andromaine's marriage, a novice in arms, amongst others, I ran in a pastoral shew against the Corinthian knights.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Being on shore wee made a tilt with our oares and sayle

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 34.

Besides those rude tideboats, tillobotes, and barges, which

No more was seen; the floating vessel swum

Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow

Rode tilting o're the waves, all dwellings else

Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp

Deep under water rould.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Py. By th' mass 'twas soft and sweet,

Some bloods would bound now,

And run a tilt.—Beaum. & Fletcher. Island Princess, Act iv.

But there was one call'd Jaques, a poor butler,

One that might well content a single woman.

Soph. And he should till her.

Id. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 3.

It fortun'd, whylest they were thus ill beset,

Sir Artegall into the tilt-yard came,

With Bragadochio, whom he lately met

Upon the way with that his snowy dame.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

The beast, when she is so hard pursued that she cannot escape, turns about and comes full tilt at the canoa.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

Plac'd on the mast (the last recourse of life)

With winds and waves I held unequal strife;

For nine long days the billows tilting o'er,

The tenth soft wafts me to Thesprotia's shore.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

The decency then that is to be observed in liberality seems to consist in its being performed with such chearful-ness;—that may shew good nature and benevolence overflowed, and [that they] do not, as in some men run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grutching uncommunicative disposition.—Spectator. No. 292.

For joyfully he left the shore,

And in a tilt-boat home return'd.—Cooper. Ver-Vert, c. 4.

One of them hoisted a sail which did not seem to reach more than six feet above the gunwale of the boat, and which, upon the falling of a slight shower, was taken down and converted into an awning or tilt.

defence of cities, bycause that the stone work withstandeth the fier, and the timberwerke the battell ram.
Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 191.

For as in these, our houses are commonlie strong and well timbered, so that in manie places there are not aboue foure, six, or nine inches betwene stud and stud.
Holinshead. Description of England, b. ii. c. 12.

It was provided in the first of Queen Elizabeth, that no timber-trees of oak, beech, and ash (where beech deservedly is made second), being one foot square at the stub, and growing within fourteen miles of the sea, or any navigable river, should be converted to coal or fewell.

of fire or tempest, or violence of an enemy.

Bp. Hall. Occasional Meditations, § 110.

About a hundred yards from the fort on the bay by the sea, there is a low timbered house, where the governour abides all the day time.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

The necessary iron-work was in great forwardness; and the timbers and planks (which, though not the most requisite performances of the sawyer's art, were yet sufficient for the purpose) were all prepared.

Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 3.

Here [New Zealand] are forests of vast extent, full of the straitest, the cleanest, and the largest timber-trees that we had ever seen; their size, their grain, and apparent durability, render them fit for any kind of building, and indeed for every other purpose except masts.—Cook. First Voy. b. ii. c. 8.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

And if this arch politician find in his pupils any remorse, any feeling or fear of God's future judgment, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any conditions:
interrupting by his vigilant endeavours all offer of timeful return towards God, by laying those great blocks of rugged poverty, and despised contempt in the narrow passage leading to his divine presence.

Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. i. c. 6.

O wither'd timeless youth, are all thy promises,

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

But being withal very poetically given, he [Arthur Kelton] must forsooth write and publish his lucubrations in verse; whereby for rhyme's sake, many material matters and the due timing of them are omitted, and so consequently rejected by historians and antiquaries.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

If, after this, a man will venture to do such an action which he knows to be thus forbidden by God; sure he contracts a greater guilt than he would do, by the omission of a duty, as to the timing of which no law of God hath determined him.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

Our conception of time originates in that of motion; and particularly in those regular and equable motions carried on in the heavens, the parts of which, from their perfect similarity to each other, are correct measures of the continuous and successive quantity called Time, with which they are conceived to co-exist. Time therefore may be defined, The perceived number of successive movements.

business of this kind before, and most of whom put their hands for a long time to it faintly and timorously, were the instruments of it.—Bolingbroke. To Sir William Windham.

During our walk they had shaken off their first timid sense of our superiority, and were become familiar.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 8.

Think on th' insulting scorn, the conscious pangs,
The future mis'ries that await th' apostate;
So shall timidity assist thy reason,
And wisdom into virtue turn thy frailty.

Johnson. Irene, Act ii. sc. 1.

Timidity, though similar, [to pusillanimity,] is not so reproachful; the term is chiefly used, where there is some apology, from sex, tender years, or feebleness of frame.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 1. § 8.

Not always tempt the distant deep,
Nor always timorously keep Along the treach'rous shore.

Cowper. Horace, b. ii. Ode 10.

Courage as well as timorousness may come by sympathy and imitation from the company wherewith men consort.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 31.

TIMONEER. It. Timone; Fr. Timon; Lat. Temo. "The beam, or draught-tree of a wagon, &c.; also, the staff, or handle (which we call the whip) of the rudder, or stern," (Cotgrave.) Whence It. Timoniere,—

A steersman, a helmsman. The word has not gained currency, nor do we want it.

While o'er the foam the ship impetuous flies,
The helm th' attentive timoneer applies.

Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 2.

To guide the wayward course amid the gloom
The watchful pilots different posts assume:
Alberd and Rodmond on the poop appear,
There to direct each guiding timoneer.—Id. Ib. c. 3.

TINNEN. } Sp. Estano; Lat. Stannum. Wach-
} ter thinks that the metal and the name were transported at the same time from Britain:—but it was called by the Gr. Κασσιτερος, which (Lennep thinks) is from the verb κασσιτείν, juxta admove, to move near or close to; and to have been given as a name to this metal, because by it, when melted, other harder metals may be joined (i.e. soldered) together. The quotations from Pliny and Plutarch shew how renowned tin was for its use in soldering other metals; and it is not improbable that it is an A.S. word, from the verb Tyn-an, claudere, to close, to shut; (to tine;) to fasten; and thus (perhaps) to solder.

Tho saw I stand on a pillere,

The fame of pius Eneas.—Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

This white lead or tinglasse—hath been of long time in estimation, ever since the war of Troy, as witnesseth the Poet Homer, who calleth it Cassiteron.—This is certain, that two pieces of black lead cannot possibly be soldered together without this tinglasse.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 16.

There is a devise to tin pots, pans, and other peeces of brass so artificially with white lead or tinglasse (an invention which came out of Fraunce) that hardly a man shall discern them from a vessell of silver; and such leaded vessels are commonly called Incotilia.—Id. Ib. c. 17.

The Cornish beeing a race of men, stout of stomach, mightie of bodie and limme, and that liued hardly in a barren countrie, and many of them could (for a need) liue vnder ground, that were tinners.

Justling or pusht with winds rude in thir shock
Tine the slant lightning, whose thwart flame driv'n down, Kindles the gumme bark of firr or pine,
And sends a comfortable heat from farr,
Which might supplie the sun.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

If anie souldier had bene found in the field without his flint and tinder-box, or had walked or gone vp and downe with his sword at his side, and not naked in his hand, for then vsed they light armour for the most part, he was terrible scourged.

Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 13.

There needeth no torch to light tinder, where a spark will do the deed.—Fuller. Worthies. Flintshire.

Aub. Peace you tinder-boxes,
That only carry matter to make a flame,

Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act i.

The priest with holy hands was seen to tine
The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

With what an hellish rage will they fly upon our guilty and timorous souls, in which there is so much tinder for their injected sparks of horror to take fire on.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

In one of them there was the stone they strike fire with, and tinder made of bark, but of what tree could not be distinguished.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 7.

Let us now reflect on the greatness of our works, for great I may call them compared to those tinder threads we have to work with.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 3.

} sation, like the ringing of metal, when stricken.

Tinkle—is applied to a less, a sharper and shorter sound.

Tinker,—so called either from the noise they make, upon something metallic, to announce their coming, or when at work. It is still pronounced Tinkler, in the North of England. See Brockett.

Thome the tyinker. and tweye of hus knaves.

Piers Plouhman, p. 106.

If I speke with tungis of men and of aungels and I haue not charite, I am maad as bras sownynge, or a cymbal tynklynge.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 13.

Thoughe I spake w^t the tonges of men and angels, & yet had no loue, I were euen as sōdinge brasse: or as a tikelynge cymball.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Whan was this said, down in an extasie,
Rauished in spirite, in a dreame she fell,
And by apparaunce herde where she did lie,
Cupide the king tinging a siluer bell,
Which men might here fro heven into hell.

Chaucer. The Test. of Creseide.

I will therefore repeat the principall matters but farre more modestly then he, least (as I sayd) I cause good and learned mens eares to tingle at his leud and vnseemely rimes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 585.

When tinkers make, no more holes then they founde.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

As vnprofitable shall I bee, as brasse, that with his vayne sounde breaketh the ayer, or as a cymball, that with his vnprofitable tinklynge troubleth the eares.

Udal. 1 Corinthians, c. 13.

Lieu. And now 'tis ev'n too true, I feel a pricking,
A pricking, a strange pricking: how it tingles?
And as it were a stitch too.

Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act iii. sc. 5.

Ten times at least in the Chronicles and Ezra, is the same word dually used; for cymbals; and the verbe of this root, is the same, where by God would expresse the tingling of the eares.—Bp. Hall. The Impresse of God.

Short. Here is such a tinkle tanklings that we can ne're lie quiet, and sleep our prayers out.

Beaum. & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act v.

Estif. Sir, there's your treasure, sell it to a tinker
To mend old kettles, is this noble usage?
Id. Rule a wife and have a Wife, Act iv.

Let us learn from hence, to abstain from all such rash and horrid imprecations, which the ears of sober heathens would tingle at; but which are more unbecoming, and more heinous (as, I fear, they are more familiar) in the mouths of Christians.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

I lov'd along the laureat grove to stray,
The paths were pleasant, and the prospect gay:
But now my genius sinks, and hardly knows
To make a couplet tinkle in the close.

Fenton. An Epistle to Mr. Southerne.

Describe we next the nature of the bees,
Bestow'd by Jove for secret purposes;
When by the tinkling sound of timbrels led,
The king of heaven in Cretan caves they fed.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Tell me, my friend, from whence hadst thou the skill,
So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
Or by the sound to judge of gold and brass,
What piece is tinker's metal, what will pass?

Id. Persius, Sat. 5.

The scratching-stick with which the seer subdu'd
The tingling tumults of his boiling blood,
Seem'd, as he whirl'd it, the Chaldean rod,
Or thyrsus, symbol of the Lybian god.

Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. v.

Nature indeed looks prettily in rhyme;
Streams tinkle sweetly in poetic chime.

Cowper. Retirement.

Held within modest bounds, the tide of speech
Pursues the course, that Truth and Nature teach;
No longer labours merely to produce
The pomp of sound, or tinkle without use.

Their flesh more ouer is red as it were tinged with saffron, and so is their wooll after the same maner.

Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 7.

TIN

The blew in black, the greene in gray, is tinct.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. November.
Why, Heav'n made beauty like herself, to view,
Not to be lock'd up in a smokey mew;
A rosy-tinced feature is heav'n's gold,
Which all men joy to touch, all to behold.
Drayton. K. John to Matilda.

Youth ought to be instructed betimes, and in the best things; for we hold those longest we take soonest: as the first scent of a vessel lasts, and the tinced the wool first receives.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Couerlids rich, some purple dy'd in graine,
Whose tinced was not from one caldron tane,
Part wove of glittering gold, part scarlet dy,
As is th' Egyptian vse of tapestry.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

Suspicion, full of eyes, and full of ears,
Doth, through the tinced of her own conceit,
See all things in the colours of her fears,
And truth itself must look like to deceit.
Daniel. Chor. in Philotas.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tinced of reason.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

He [Plutarch] being deeply tinced, as it were, with the suffusions of it, every thing which he look'd upon seem'd to him colour'd with it.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 224.

It is thus, says Dacier, that we lay a full colour, when the wool has taken the whole tinced, and drunk in as much of the dye as it can receive.—Dryden. Juvenal Ded.

There is constantly a cheerful grey sky, just sufficient to screen the sun, and to mitigate the violence of its perpendicular rays, without obscuring the air, or tinging the day-light with an unpleasant or melancholy hue.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 5.

This wood by the tinced it afforded, appeared to have its coloured part genuine; but as for the white part, it appears much less enriched with the tingent property.
Boyle.

What bright enamel! and what various dyes!
What lively tints delight our wondering eyes!
Th' almighty painter glows in every line.
Somerville. To Lady Anne Coventry.

And hither Morpheus sent his kindest dreams,
Raising a world of gayer tinced and grace;
O'er which were shadowy cast Elysian gleams,
That play'd, in waving lights, from place to place.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

I will endeavour to excel in a much more difficult way, in softenings and middle teints; and yet by these to form a manner so strong, as shall be sufficient for my own reputation, and for your service.
Bolingbroke. The Occasional Writer, No. 3.

March the 27th in the sealed weather-glass, when first put into water, the tinced spirit rested at 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 147.

At about 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours from the first solution of the salt, I found the tinced liquor to be in the midst between the freezing marks, whereof the one was at 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches (at which height when the tinced rested, it would usually be some, though but a small frost abroad.—Id. Ib.

It would not be amiss to find also, by hiding sometimes one part of the prism, and sometimes another, and observing where the light or colour vanished thereupon, by which reflection and by which refraction each of the several places whereon the light rebounding from, or passing through, the prism, appeared either sincere or tinced, was produced.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 727.

All are commonly nothing but only the effects of a melancholly fancy tinced with religious fears, and flush'd with a natural enthusiasm.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 8.

When they want to produce a black colour, they mix the soot procured from an oily nut, called doodeoee, with the juice of the kokka, in different quantities, according to the proposed depth of the tinge.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 7.

It gives boldness and grandeur to plains and fens, tinge and colouring to clays and fallows.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

It is, indeed, generally true, that the history of a mechanical art affords but insipid entertainment to a mind which is tinced with the liberality of philosophy and the elegance of classical literature.—Knox. Ess. No. 135.

The melancholy man such dreams,
As brightest evidence, esteems;
Fain would he see some distant scene
Suggested by his restless spleen,
And fancy's telescope applies
With tinced glass to cheat his eyes.—Green. The Spleen.

TINSEL, n. } Skinner derives from Fr.

TIP

A stuff or silk inwrought with silver, (i. e. glittering spangles of silver;) any thing sparkling or glittering:—merely sparkling or glittering, shining, showy, specious.

"Tinsell of seignorie," in R. Brunne—"fine robes, honour," (Hearne.)

"If him com any scathe tinselle of seignorie, Tille gow it wille be wathe, leues alle this folie."
R. Brunne, p. 293.

"Yea this I know," added he, "that a great man's daughter (the Duke of Suffolk's daughter Jane, he means) receiving from Lady Mary, before she was queen, goodly apparel of tynsel, cloth of gold and velvet, laid on with parchment lace of gold, when she saw it, said, What shall I do with it?"—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Q. Mary, an. 1558.

—He has no patience
Unless she light in's teeth, to look about him.
He guesses now, and chafes and frets like tinsel.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 2.

Lop. Nor that thou seemst an honest man: for here
We have no trading with such tinsel-stuff;
To be an excellent thief, is all we aim at.
Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 2.

There is more gold now than before, but it is more allayed in the running, or so hidden in heaps of tinsel, that when men are best pleased, now adays they are most commonly cozened.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

Our mother [earth] ne'er glories in her fruit,
Till by the sun clad in her tinsel sute.
Drayton. K. John to Matilda.

So have I mighty satisfaction found,
To see his tinsel reason on the ground:
To see the florid fool despis'd, and know it,
By some who scarce have words enough to show it.
Dryden. An Essay on Satire.

It was presumed that the gloom of equivocation, which spreads itself through the formal chapters of the one; and the glare of puerile declamation, that tinsels over the trite essays of the other, could hide their true end from the observation of those whose destruction they were conspiring.
Warburton. The Alliance, b. i.

The world, no doubt, was well enough
To smooth the manners of the rough;
Might please the giddy and the vain,
Those tinsell'd slaves of folly's train.—Whitehead. Variety.

O happy peasant! Oh unhappy bard!
His mere tinsel, hers the rich reward;
He prais'd perhaps for ages yet to come,
She never heard of half a mile from home.
Cowper. Truth.

Let him assure himself that the character of a man of integrity and benevolence is far more desirable than that of a man of pleasure or of fashion. The one is like solid gold, the other like tinsel.—Knox. Ess. No. 8.

TINTIMARRE. Fr. Tintamarre; tinter, to ring, and marre, a mattock. Any horrible din, (Cotgrave.) Skinner thinks either from tinnitus, martius, or (which he likes much better) formed from the sound. He calls it—

An obstreperous noise, and such as is made by great collision or clashing; also the clamour of quarrelling; any great and disagreeable noise.

There, there no frightful tintamarre
Of tumult in the many-headed beast,
Nor all the loud artillery of war,
Can fright us from that sweet, that happy rest,
Wherewith the still and silent grave is blest.
Cotton. Death.

TINY. Lye refers it to Teine, (qv.)
"Tiny,—puny, little. It is usually joined with little as an augmentative; so they say,—A little tiny thing," (Ray.)

—Foole. He that has and a little-tyne wit,
With heigh-ho, the winde and the raine,
Must make content with his fortunes fit,
Though the raine it raineth every day.
Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves
On little females, and on little loves:
Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse.
The Lamentation of Glumdalclitch.

Those twinkling tiny lustres of the land
Drop one by one from Fame's neglecting hand,
Lethæan gulfs receive them as they fall,
And dark oblivion soon absorbs them all.
Cowper. On some Names in the Biographia Britannica.

tipped too much strong drink.

But they played not this pranke vntill they had tipped well of the wine which remained yet in their prize.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 336.

O the 15 of this moneth, haunTERS of alehouses and taverns, vagabonds, and such kind of men, who lurked in tippling-houses, and ready for tumults and pillage, were commanded forthwith to depart the city.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1601.

Ger. The knave her father

Was bawd to her there, and kept a tipling house,
You must even to it again: a modest function.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid in the Mill, Act iii. sc. 2.

Believe my calculation, these old women,
When they are tipped, and a little heated,
Are like new wheels, they'll roare you all the town ore
Till they be greas'd.—Id. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 2.

By keeping rustical company at Quainton, or at the small cure that he had near to his native place, before he had obtained Quainton, (where 'twas usual with him to sit tippling in a blind-ale-house with some of his neighbours,) was in great hazard to have lost all those excellent gifts that came after to be well esteemed and rewarded in him.

TIRELING, adj. } tire or weary, (Somner.) This TIREDSOME. } word occurs several times in Shakespeare, and the commentators are much perplexed about it. (See Tooke.) To tire, is—

To tear or rend in pieces; to prey upon, to feed upon; to harass or distress, to vex, to trouble; to wear out or weary, to fatigue.

"I graunt well that thou endurest wo,
As sharpe as doth he Tesiphus in hell,
Whose stomacke foules tiren evermo,
That highten vultures, as bookes tell."

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

The foule that hight vultour, that eateth the stomake or the giserne of Tytius is so fulfilled of his songe, that it nill eaten ne tyren no more.—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

To beare his shield his brest began to tire.

Mont. Ye dregs of basness, vultures amongst men,
That tyre upon the hearts of generous spirits.
Cred. You do us wrong sir, we tyre no generous spirits, we tyre nothing but our hackneys.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Honest Man's Fortune, Act ii.

— Then mine own honesty

Tells me 'tis poor, having indifferent means
To keep me in my quality and rank,
At my return, to tire anothers bounty,
And let mine own grow lusty.—Id. The Coxcombe, Act i.

Sam. Have they not sword-players, and ev'ry sort
Of gymnic artists, wrestlers, riders, runners,
Juglers and dancers, antics, mummers, mirmirs,
But they must pick me out with shackles tir'd,
And over-labour'd at their publick mill,
To make them sport with blind activity.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, v. 1334.

But most the former villaine, which did lead
Her tyreling iade, was bent her to abuse;
Who, though she were with wearinesse nigh dead,
Yet could not let her lite, nor rest a little stead.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

Or say'st thou this same horse shall win the prize,
Because his dam was swiftest Truncheffe,
Or Runcevall his sire? himself a Gallaway?
Whiles like a tyreling jade he lags half-way.

Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 3.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence that it hath not satisfied us bountifully.—Hakewill. On Providence.

Hence is the upright man happily secured from tiring

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Immediate sieges, and the tire of war,

Roll in thy eager mind.—J. Philips. Blenheim.

The singing therefore should be wholly applied to the lyrical part of the entertainment, which, by being freed from a tiresome, unnatural recitative, must certainly administer more reasonable pleasure.
Lansdowne. The British Enchanters, Pref.

Yet, whatever degree of elegance he possesses, the natural monotony of French verse tires an ear accustomed to the various harmony of our English poet.—Knox. Ess. No. 137.

This being a religion founded only on temporal sanctions, and burdened with a minute and tiresome ritual, had the people known it to be only preparatory to another, founded on better promises and easier observances, they would never have born the yoke of the law.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. s. 6.

TIRE, n.

TIREMENT.

To tire or attire, vestire, to clothe or invest. See ATTIRE.
To clothe, to dress. The noun is generally applied to a dress for the head; whence it has been supposed by some to be a corruption of Tiara.

Likewise whē I say, misse women tyre thē selues with gold and silke to please their louers.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 72.

But when they came vnto the womē, as theire tirements were most precious, so the more violently they plucked thē away.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 41.

Envy, ye Muses, at your thriving mate,
Cupid hath crowned a new Laureat:
I saw his statue gayly tyr'd in greene,
As if he had some second Phœbus beene.

Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 9.

And on her head she wore a tyre of gold.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tyres, nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and winges of vanity,
But clothes meet to keep keene cold away,
And naked nature seemely to array.

Id. Ib.

For we are no less Cynthia than we were;
Nor is our power, but as ourself, the same:
Though we have now put on no tire of shine,
But mortal eyes undazzled may endure.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 3.

1939

But since there is such necessity to the hear-say of a tire, a perwig, or a vizard, that plays must have bin seen, what difficulty was there in that? when in the colleges so many of the young divines, and those in next aptitude to divinity, have bin seen so often upon the stage.

Milton. An Apology for Smectymnus.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 316.

Venus, after she had passed the river Eurotas, laid by her mirrors and looking glasses, cast aside her dainty jewels, and other wanton ornaments, and threw away that tissue and lovely girdle of hers.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 517.

I had rather meet ten enemies in the field

All sworn to fetch my head, than be brought on To change an hour's discourse with one of these Smooth city-fools, or tissue-cavaliers.

Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act i. sc. 3.

What broker's lousy wardrobe cannot reach

With tissued pains to pranck each peasant's breech?

Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 2.

Garter was also allowed three yards of cloth of gold, two yards of cloth of gold tissue, and sixteen of blue velvet, which were to serve for the banner, the mantle of the helmet, and the lining of the same, for the installation of the French king.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. (1551.)

On the 22d day, being St. George's day, at Hampton Court, the king (about whom waited the heralds) with other lords and knights of the garter, went in their robes on procession, with three crosses, and with clerks and priests, and the lord chancellor, the chief minister, mitred; and all they in copes of cloth of gold and tissue, singing Salve Festa Dies.

Id. Mary I. (1555.)

Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act ii. sc. 1.

Justice and judgment, which are the main businesses of the law, must be chiefly regarded; but yet, even the tithing of mist, and anise, and cummin, may not be neglected.
Bp. Hall. Ser. 1 Cor. xi. 10.

In our English we commonly call tythe; of the Saxon word teotha, i. e. the tenth; and teothan sceattas, tythes:
of the verb Teo, i. traho, extraho, & tiehth, subtrahit; as if we should say, the choice part, or the part that is taken and chosen from the rest for God himself, which whether it be the tenth or not, yet it is generally comprehended in Latin under decimæ, and in Englysh under the name tythe.

*Spelman. Of Tythes, c. 14.

Military spoil, and the prey gotten in war, is also tythable, from Gr. Τιλλ-ειν, vellere, or vellicare, to pull, to twitch: nam ex levi vellicatione sive tractatione provenit titillatio, (Vossius.)

To tickle; "to touch, stir, or move with delight," (Cotgrave.)

For certainly the pleasures that result from the thoughts of another world in those, that not only see it painted in their imaginations, but feel it begun in their souls, are as beyond all the titillations of sense, as a real lasting happiness is beyond the delusive images of a dream.

Glanvill, Ess. 6.

Tickling also causeth laughter: the cause may be, the emission of the spirits, and so of the breath, by a flight from titillation; for upon tickling, we see there is ever a starting, or shrinking, away of the part, to avoid it.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 766.

Though a young maid hath never seen a man,

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act ii.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.

Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 5.

With nostrils opening wide, o'er hill o'er dale
The vigorous hounds pursue, with every breath
Inhale the grateful steam, quick pleasures sting
Their tingling nerves, while they their thanks repay,
And in triumphant melody confess
The titillating joy.

Somerville. The Chase, b. i.

The moment we handled the root, they swarmed from Shenstone. To a Friend.

TITTLÉ. Wiclif so renders the Lat. Apex; and in the German version of Luther, (Matthew, v. 18.) the word is tüttel, which Wachter interprets—punctum, apex, and derives from the A. S. verb Thyd-an, figere, pungeré. See THISTLE.

A point; any thing as small or minute as a point; the smallest part, particle, or portion.

Forsothe I sey to you till hevene and erthe passe oon lettre, or oon tittle, [apex] schal not passe fro the lawe til alle thingis be done.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

Forsothe it is lighter hevene and erthe to passe: than that o tittel [apicem] falle fro the lawe.—Id. Luk, c. 16.

Soner shall heauen and earth perysh, then one tittle of the lawe shall peryshe?—Bible, 1551. Ib.

2 Int. I'll quote him to a tittle, let him speak wisely, and plainly.—Beaum. & Fletcher. The Woman-Hater, Act iii. sc. 4.

But Saint Paul also not only making a narrative of the institution but teaching the Corinthians the manner of its celebration, to a tittle he recites the words of Christ.

TITTLÉ-TA'TTLÉ, i. e. Tattle-tattle. See TATTLE.

TO. See DO. Dut. Toe, tot; Ger. Zu; A. S. To; Goth. Du.—Omnia affinia Latino ad, (Wachter.) To,—as to make, to walke, to doe,—a Græco articulo το, idem est ut το ποιειν, το περιπατειν, το πρᾶτειν, (Minshew.) “The preposition to, (in Dutch written toe and tot, a little nearer to the original,) is the Gothic substantive Tau, or tauhts, i. e. act, effect, result, consummation; which Gothic substantive is indeed itself no other than the past part. tauid, tauids, of the verb tauyan, agere: and what is done, is terminated, ended, finished. In the Teutonic, this verb is written Tuan, or tuon, whence the modern German Thun, and its preposition, (varying like its verb,) tu, (zu.) In the A. S. the verb is teog-an, and the prep. to.” “Lowth says—the preposition to, placed before the verb, makes the infinitive mood. He would have said more truly, that to placed before some nouns, makes verbs:” and to was so prefixed to distinguish the infinitive from the noun, after the infinitive had lost that distinguishing termination (an) which it had formerly. Chaucer sometimes uses the infinitive termination, excluding to, as—“He was worthy han (i. e. to have) his life.” Sometimes he drops the infinitive, and uses to, as—“Women desiren to have soveraynte,” (Wif of Bathes Tale.) Sometimes he uses both termination and sign, as—“Than longen folks to gon (i. e. go-en) on pilgrimages, and palmeres for to seken strange strondes,” (Prologue.) (See TOOKE.) Lye says,—to, in compounds, signifies ad and dis, (a curious instance of the determination with which our lexicographers wrench a word to any meaning they please,) as, to-bær-an, adferre; to-bræc-æn, disrumpere. Mr. Tyrwhitt says,—to, in composition with words, is generally augmentative; “as the helmes they to-hewen, and to-shrede,” i. e. hewe and cut to pieces, (into shreds.) The bones they to-breste: i. e. break in pieces: with other instances;—in all of which to, (which might as properly have been written do,) including in itself action, gives emphasis to the action expressed by the verb to which it is pre-posed. Such words in A. S. are abundant. In R. Gloucester, and R. Brunne, and in Piers Plouhman, they are also frequent. Wiclif uses *to*rent,—“The veil of the temple was *to*rent,” (Matthew, c. 27;) tobarst,—“And he was hanged and tobarst the myddil,” (Dedis, c. 1;) tobreyd, with others.

To is used in opposition to from.

TOAD. A. S. Tade; perhaps from the verb teon, teog-an, to extend, to expand. The Lat. Bufo is supposed, by some etymologists, to be applied to this animal,—quia tumida bestia est.

TOAST, n. } Fr. Tostée, a toast of bread;
TOAST, v. } from Lat. Tostum, past part.
TO'ASTER. } of torrere, to bake.

Any thing baked; usually, bread sliced and baked before the fire.

To toast, (met.)—to name or propose, any one whose health, success, &c., any sentiment which is to be drunk: and—

A toast,—any one who, or any thing which, is so named or proposed. See the quotation from the Tatler.

Their darts are made of two sorts: the one with many forks of bones in the fore end, and likewise in the midst: their proportions are not much unlike our toasting yrons, but longer.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 38.

Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds new drawn, and sprinkled with a little loaf sugar. Bacon. Medical Remains.

It happen'd that on a publick day a celebrated beauty of those times was in the Cross-Bath, and one of the crowd on her admirers took a glass of the water in which the fair one stood, and drank her health in the company. There was in the place a gay fellow, half fuddl'd, who offer'd to jump in, and swore, tho' he lik'd not the liquor, he would have the toast. Tho' he was oppos'd in his resolution, this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquors, who has ever since been call'd a toast.—Tatler, No. 24.

TOBA'CCO. } Said to be so called from TOBA'CCONIST. } an island in the West Indies, TOBA'CCONING. } where it was found in abundance by the Spaniards. See the quotations from Hackluyt and Robertson.

There is an herbe [in Virginia] which is sowed apart by itselfe and is called by the inhabitants Vppowoc: in the West Indies it hath diuers names, according to the seuerall places and countreys where it groweth, and is vsed. The Spaniards call it Tabacco.—Hackluyt. Voy. vol. iii. p. 271.

Tobacco is a thing of great price, if it be in request. For an acre of it will be worth, (as is affirmed,) two hundred pounds, by the year, towards charge.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 855.

There whether yt diuine tobacco were,
Or panachæa, or polygony,
She fownd, and brought it to her patient deare,
Who al this while lay bleding out his hart-blood neare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Then the remnant of your regiment, are wealthy tobacco-marchants, that set up with one ounce, and break for three.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Scornful Lady, Act i.

Hence it is, that the lungs of the tobacconist are rotted.

B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fair.

Neither was it any news upon this guilday, to have the cathedral, now open on all sides, to be filled with musketeers, waiting for the major's return; drinking and tobacconing as freely, as if it had turned ale-house.

Bp. Hall. His Hard Measure.

Let any one not skilled in painting be told when he sees

The next morning we applied privately to the merchant Fedositseh to purchase some tobacco for the sailors, who had now been upward of a twelve-month without this favourite commodity.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 2.

Lane and his associates, by their constant intercourse with the Indians, had acquired a relish for their favourite enjoyment of smoking tobacco.—They brought with them a specimen of this new commodity to England, and taught their countrymen the method of using it.

TOD, n. } A certain measure of wool, says TOD, v. } Skinner—from the Ger. Zotte, a lock or bunch of hair. Minshew proposes the Flemish Todderen, neetere, which is the common Dut.
verb Tuyeren, to tie.

As much wool as is tied in one bundle. Generally—

Any thing thick, and bushy; a bush, a thicket.
Tod is still—

The common name of a fox in Scotland; and perhaps so called from his bushy tail.

Long wandring up and downe the land,
With bow and bolts in either hand,
For birds in bushes tooting,
At length within the yvie todde,

Clo. Let me see, euery leauen-weather toddes, euery tod yeeldes pound and odde shilling: fiftene hundred shorne, what comes the wooll too?

Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 2.

In those ancient times, a tod of wool would have purchased twice the quantity of subsistence which it will purchase at present; and consequently twice the quantity of labour, if the real recompence of labour had been the same in both periods.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

TOG

TO-DAY. } A. S. To-dæg, hodiæ, this day.
To-MORROW. } A. S. To-morg-en. (See To, and MORROW.) To-morrow is applied to—
The day next following to-day or this,—the present day.

And he seyde to hem, go ye and seye to that fox: lo I caste out fendis and I make perflightly heethis, to day and to morowe: and the thridde day I am endid.

Wiclif. Luk, c. 13.

And he sayde vnto them. Go ye and tell that foxe, behold
I cast out deuils and heale the people to daye and to morow, and the thyrd daye I make an ende.—Bible. 1551. Id.

Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 29.

Beside the liquor or water in the fruit, [coco-nut] there is also a sort of wine drawn from the tree called toddy, which looks like whey.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

A kind of wine, called toddy, is procured from the tree [fan-palm], by cutting the buds which are to produce flowers, soon after their appearance, and tying under them small baskets, made of the leaves, which are so close as to hold liquids without leaking.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

TOE. Piers Plouhman writes the plural Ton.
See in v. Toor. Chaucer writes it—Tone, i. c.
to-en. Dut. Tee, teen; Ger. Zahe; Sw. Tä;
A. S. Ta; which the etymologists derive either from Gr. Ta-eiv, extendere, or the A. S. verb Teon, to extend, to expand, or from ten; because that is their number. (See Wachter and Junius.) It is probably from te-on, to take; applied first to the talons or claws of an animal.

But most men ordinarily do fault herein exceeding much: now when they be wearied, toyled, and foiled with painfull labours and wants, yeeld their bodies to be melted and spent quite with voluptuous pleasures.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 513.

About the caudron many cookes accoyld
With hookes and ladles, as need did requyre;
The whyles the viaundes in the vessell boyld,
They did about their businesse sweat, and sorely toyld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

— The boteman sträyt
Held on his course with stayed stedfastnesse,
Ne ever shroncke, ne ever sought to bayt
His tyred armes for toylesome wearinesse.—Id. Ib. c. 12.

Their life must be toilesomely spent in hewing of wood, and drawing of water for all Israel.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Gibeonites.
They toil, they sweat, thick clouds of dust arise,
The doubling clamours echo to the skies.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.
With these of old to toils of battle bred,
In early youth my hardy days I led:
Fir'd with the thirst which virtuous envy breeds,
And smit with love of honourable deeds.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Here Jove with Hermes came; but in disguise
Of mortal men conceal'd their deities:
One laid aside his thunder, one his rod;
And many toilsome steps together trod.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

"The fainting native eyes with dumb despair
The swelling clusters of the bending vine,
The fruitful lawns confess his toilsome care,
Alas! the fruits his languid hopes resign!"
Mickle. Liberty.

But since we are assured of enjoying to eternity in perfection, whatever graces we have cultivated here with sincerity; the toilsomeness of the work, and the slowness of the success, ought not to deter us in the least.

Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

TOIL, n. Fr. Toiles. Toil de arraignée, a cobweb, Skinner derives from Lat. Tela. See TILL.

Any thing lifted or raised; a snare, set up (sc.) to catch animals. A spider's web is a toil, i. e. something lifted up, or raised, to catch flies.

His enemies that were layd in ambush, haue chosen a feld for their purpose, not passynge a myle wide accompting euery waye, enuironed round about, eyther with cōber-some woodes, or els a verry depe ryuer, beset it with theyr bushment, as it had bene wyth a toyle.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 251.

But of all others, the toile made of Cumes flaxen cords, are so strong, that the wild boar falling into it, will bee caught: and no marvaile, for these kind of nets will checke the very edge of a sword or such like weapon.

Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

Seeing herself in danger to be taken within the toil many times, [the bear] casteth herself round upon her head, and endeavoureth that way to escape, rather then either by paws or fangs to burst the toil.—Id. Plutarch, p. 829.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deepmouth'd dogs did forest-walks surround.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

TOILETTE. Fr. Toilette, from toil, cloth, and toil, from tela, linen cloth, (Cotgrave.) The English (says Menage) call it a combing cloth. Toilet is now applied to—
The dressing-table.

An untouch'd Bible grac'd her toilet:
No fear that thumb of hers should spoil it.

Our Lord charged his disciples, when by any they were repulsed or neglected in their preaching, to leave those persons and places, shaking off the dust from their feet, in token of an utter detestation and desertion of them.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 41.

Heartless, and tokenless if it remain,
It ought to pass, in strictness, for profane.
Byrom. On Church Communion.

In every canoe there were young plantains, and branches of a tree which the Indians call E'Midho: these as we afterwards learnt, were brought as tokens of peace and amity.
Cook. First Voyage b. i. c. 8.

TOLE, or } Chaucer writes—Tull. Ray TOLL. } says—To toll is to entice or draw in, to decoy, or flatter; as the bell tolling calls in the people to church:—and Milton speaks of—
A tolling sign-post, hung out to call passengers:—
Bp. Burgess appears to coincide with this origin, and thinks, to toll, may be,—to produce an effect by slow, insensible degrees; but it seems more probably to be a consequential usage of Toil, to draw into, to lure into, a toil: generally,—to draw along; to induce, to allure, to entice. And see TOLL, infra.

With empty hand, men may no hawkes tull.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4132.

The conflict arose betwene the spirite desyrous to amende, and sensualitie toilyng and alluryng hym agayn, to his accustomed sinfull liuing.—Udal. Marke, c. 9.

With these are the ill spirites delited: and suche as are their sworne seruantes, thei dooe rather lure and tol & traine with those baites, thei fil them.—Id. Luke, c. 15.

The 10. of this moneth I went to the shore, the people following mee in their canoas: I *toll*ed them on shore, and vsed them with much courtesie, and then departed aboard, they following me, and my company.
Hackluyt Voyages, vol. iii. p. 105.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 151.

And the next day, they sēt thither their horsemen, first to toll out oure men into the daunger of theyr bushmentes, and than to assaile them as they were enclosed.
Id. Ib. fol. 247.

If they did let them stand, they should but toll beggars to the towne, thereby to surcharge the rest of the parish, & laie more burden vpon them.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 13.

Or voyces calling me in dead of night,
To make me follow, and so toll me on Through mire and standing pools, to find my ruine.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act i.

Here he was *toll*ed to land at Moha, by the treacherous Aga, and then had eight of his men barbarously slain, himself and seven more chained up by the necks.
Fuller. Worthies. Chester.

His [Felix] wife Drusilla was held by usurpation; he had *toll*ed her away from her husband, the king of the Emiseni, saith Josephus, and therefore he could hear no more of it.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 604.

I will not fail to give ye, readers, a present taste of him from his title, hung out like a tolling sign-post to call passengers, not simply a confutation, but a modest confutation, with a laudatory of itself obtruded in the very first word.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnues.

And then, that whatever you observe him to be more frightened at than he should, you be sure to toll him on to by insensible degrees, till he at last, quitting his fears, masters the difficulty, and comes off with applause.
Locke. Of Education, § 115.

With this sweet experience of heaven within us, we should go on to heaven with unspeakable triumph and alacrity, being *toll*ed all along from step to step, with the alluring relishes of its joys and pleasures.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

We shall be inconsiderately *toll*ed on from sin to sin in the course of a heedless and unreflecting life, till, before ever we are aware, our inclination to the sin which we have so heedlessly repeated, becomes too strong for our pious resolution.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 846.

It dooethe teache them to execute the true offices of princes, and not to be tirauntes, and causeth the people more gladlye to obey euery good prince, and more quietly to *toll*erate and beare with the bad.—Udal. John, Pref.

For the one (which is contempt of marriage) ye holde in your erroneouse doctryne, and the other (which is a *toll*erance among your selues) ye are compelled to suffer, least theyr more nombre wolde breake from yow.
Bale. Apologie, fol. 106.

To *toll*erate those thinges, whiche dooe seeme bytter or greuous (wherof there be many in the lyfe of man, and in fortune) in such wyse as thou depart not from the astate of nature, neyther from the worshyp pertheyninge vnto a wyse man, betokeneth a good courage, and also moche constance.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 14.

There is also moderation in *toll*eration of fortune of euery sorte, whiche of Tulli is called equabilitie.—Id. Ib. c. 20.

I doubt not but that men indued with sense of common equitie, will soone discerne, that besides eminent and competent knowledge, wee are to descend to a lower step, receiving knowledge in that degree, which is but tollerable.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 81.

Goropius fetches all out of Dutch, and more tollerably perhaps this than many other of his etymologies.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17. Illustrations.

Certes, sage counsell and wisdom in the good use of pleasures and delights, whereby we continue honest, we ordinarily do call continence and temperance; the same in dangers and travels, we terme tollerance, patience, and fortitude; in contracts and management of state-affaires, we give the name of loyalty, equity, and justice.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 189.

So that to *toll*erate is not to prosecute. And the question whether the prince may *toll*erate diuers persuasions, is no more then whether he may lawfully persecute any man for not being of his opinion. Now in this case he is just so to *toll*erate diversity of persuasions as he is to *toll*erate publick actions: for no opinion is judicable, nor no person punishable, but for a sin.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 16.

Upon these very grounds we may easily give account of that great question, Whether it be lawful for a prince to give *toll*eration to several religions.—Id. Ib.

By continuing in communion with that party of the church from whence they dissented in opinion, they would have declared, that they judged their errors to be tolerable.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

When poor, she's scarce a tolerable evil
But rich, and fine, a wife's a very devil.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

In the beginning of September, as had been already mentioned, our men were tolerably well recovered.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 4.

Alleging that if God ruled the world, so much wickedness and impiety would not be tolerated therein.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

Since you are pleased to enquire what are my thoughts about the mutual toleration of Christians in their different professions of religion, I must needs answer you freely, that I esteem that toleration to be the chief characteristic mark of the true church.—Locke. On Toleration.

The interested and active zeal of religious teachers can be dangerous and troublesome only where there is either but one sect tolerated in the society, or where the whole of a large society is divided into two or three great sects.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

The Christian spirit of charity and tolerance which breathes through this work, and appears in the sentiments which the author avowed in a former publication, entitled "The Case Stated," acquits him of the most distant suspicion of a design to advance the credit of his own church by wilfully depreciating the character of an illustrious adversary.
Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 44. App.

At the same time we know and lament his [Gibbon's] eagerness to throw a veil over the deformities of the heathen theology, to decorate with all the splendor of panegyric the tolerant spirit of its votaries, to degrade by disingenuous insinuation, or by sarcastic satire, the importance of revelation, &c.—White. Bampton Lectures, Ser. 3.

Toleration is of two kinds: the allowing to dissenters the unmolested profession and exercise of their religion, but with an exclusion from offices of trust and emolument in the state, which is a partial toleration; and the admitting them, without distinction, to all the civil privileges and capacities of other citizens, which is a complete toleration.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. vi. c. 10.

To toll a bell, Skinner thinks, is formed from the sound. He, and Junius, derive toll, a tribute; A. S. Toll; Dut. Tol; Ger. Zol; Sw. Tul; Fr. Tailler, from the Gr. Τελλ-ος. Others give it the same origin as tally, (qv.) See also TALLIAGE.

Tooke thinks that toll, and the Fr. Taille, (qv.)—taken of goods—differ only in the pronunciation, and consequent writing of them. It is a part lifted off, or taken away. To raise taxes, to levy taxes, a levy upon any person, are common expressions. "The toll of a bell," he adds, "is its being lifted up, which causes that sound we call its toll." See TOLE, or TOLL.

A tax or tribute, levied or raised;—to toll, to raise or levy, a tax or tribute; also, to pay it.

To toll,—to raise, and, consequently, to sound a bell; to sound it (at a particular hour, as a signal, or call.)

Those other disciples, whose calling is recorded, were from the fisher boat; this, from the toll-booth: they were unlettered; this [Matthew] infamous.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Matthew Called.

For we hardly can abide publicanes, customers, and toll-gatherers, but are mightily offended with them, not when they exact from us, and cause us to pay toll for any commodities or wares that are openly brought in; but when they keep a ferretting and searching for such things as be hidden.

Which now do sound like mandrakes dreadful groans.
Drayton. Lady Geraldine to the Earl of Surrey.

For station is properly no rest, but one kind of motion, relating unto that which physicians (from Galen) do name extensive or tonical; that is, an extension of the muscles or organs of motion maintaining the body at length or in its proper figure.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 1.

The strange situation I am in, and the melancholy state of public affairs, take up much of my time, divide or even dissipate my thoughts, and which is worse, drag the mind down, by perpetual interruptions, from a philosophical tone, or temper, to the drudgery of private and public business.
Bolingbroke. Letter to Alex. Pope.

Can any tolerable reason be given for those strange new postures used by some in the delivery of the word? Such as shutting the eyes, distorting the face, and speaking through the nose, which I think cannot so properly be called preaching, as toning of a sermon.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

In our seasons of abstraction when we restrain self to the spiritual part we change our tone, for then we claim to be perpetual, unperishable, and unchangeable.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 6.

To almost every sentiment we utter, more especially to every strong emotion, Nature hath adapted some peculiar tone of voice; inasmuch, that he who should tell another that he was very angry, or much grieved, in a tone which did not suit such emotions, instead of being believed, would be laughed at.—Blair, Lect. 33.

We ought, certainly, to read blank verse so as to make every line sensible to the ear. At the same time, in doing so, every appearance of sing-song and tone must be carefully guarded against.—Id. Ib.

To the judicious performance upon this solemn instrument, [the organ,] my observations now naturally recur. In point of tonic power, I presume it will be allowed preferable to all others.—Mason. On Church Musick.

What an abridgment of art, what a variety of uses hath nature laid upon that one member the tongue, the grand instrument of tast, the faithful judge, the sentinel, the watchman of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, the necessary servant of mastication, swallowing, sucking, and a great deal besides?
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 5.

It is worth any man's while to watch the agility of his tongue; the wonderful promptitude with which it executes changes of position, and the perfect exactness. Each syllable of articulated sound requires for its utterance a specific action of the tongue, and of the parts adjacent to it.

TONTINE. See the quotation from Smith.

Annuities for life have occasionally been granted in two different ways: either upon separate lives, or upon lots of lives, which in French are called tontines, from the name of their inventor.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

TOO, i. e. to. To prefixed to verbs gives emphasis. See TO.

Placed before adjectives or adverbs, it gives addition, increase, augmentation, excess; and then, generally, implies—

More, also, likewise; more than; over, beyond.

And certes, if it n'ere to long to here:
I wolde have told you fully the manere.

TOOK. See TAKE.

TOOL. A. S. Tol, tole, tohl; from til-ian, to labour, (Skinner.) Tool is,— (Some instrument, any instrument) lifted up, or taken up, to work with, (met.)— Applied to persons, who are the tools or instruments employed or used by others.

— And eke that angry foole
Which follow'd her, with cursed hands unclean
Whipping her horse, did with his smarting toole
Oft whip her dainty selfe, and much augment her doole.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

Carpenter's art was the invention of Dædalus, as also the tools thereto belonging, to wit, the saw, the chip, axe, and hatchet, the plumbe line, the auger and wimble, the strong glew, as also fish-glew, and stone saudre.

Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.
Perhaps you took me for a fool,
Design'd alone your sex's tool.
Dorset. The Antiquated Coquet.

Thus when the gods are pleas'd to plague mankind,
Our own rash hands are to the task assign'd;

TOOT, v. } Dut. Tuyte, tote, cornu, tuyten,
To'OTER. } canere cornu, to sound a horn,
(Kilian.) A. S. Tot-ian, eminere tanquam cornu e fronte, (Lye.) The Dut. Tuyten is also strepere, tinnire, to make a noise; tuyten in de oore, to tell, to whisper in the ear. Neither the horn nor the whisper is part of the meaning.

To toot, seems to be applied to any means of knowing, or making known:—

To search, to seek, to peep or pry; to ken, to espy, to look into, to look out.

In Piers Plouhman,—a beme toten, is a beam espy: his ton toteden out,—is—his toes peeped, looked out. A toting hill, Udal himself explains. A toting ruff,—a ruff looking over or out, projecting, overhanging. Toting noses,—projecting, prominent.

Tooters, (in Beaum. & Fletch.) were to announce the king's approach (by sound of horn); and hence, to toot, is—

To make known, to announce, by (the loud noise of) the horn; to sound the horn; or, (in Dutch,) to make known by the low sound of a whisper; to whisper.

The origin seems to be the A. S. To-wit-anne. Lye notices the phrase—lc do eow to wittane, I do you to wit, facio vos scire: scire licet.

To wit, tooit, toot, is an obvious course of corruption.

Whou myght thou in thy brothers eighe a bare mote loken,
And in thyn owen eighe nought a beme toten?
Piers Plouhman. Crede, b. iii.

Fall a drinking till supper time, be carried to bed, top'd out of your seller, and be good for nothing all the night after.—Dryden. The Wild Gallant, Act iii.

The will thus determin'd, never lets the understanding lay by the object; but all the thoughts of the mind, and powers of the body are uninterruptedly imploy'd that way, by the determinations of the will, influenc'd by that topping uneasiness as long as it lasts.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21. § 38.

I have heard say, he had not less than 1000 slaves, some of whom were topping merchants, and had many slaves under them.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

As to soft gales top-heavy pines bow low
Their heads, and lift them as they cease to blow;
Thus oft they rear, and oft the head decline,
As breathe, or pause, by fits, the air divine.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

Straight to the line his sanguin'd spire he roll'd,
And curl'd around in many a winding fold.
The topmost branch a mother bird possest;
Eight callow infants fill'd the mossy nest.
Id. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

But they supposing their Admiral was engaged with enemies, hoisted up their topsails, and crowd'd all the sail they could make, and ran full sail ashore after him.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1682.

You sprang an arch, which, in a scurvy
Humour, you tumbled topsy-turvy.
Swift. Christmas Box for Dr. Delany.

I have heard enough of his irony and that his words are to be turned topside tother way to understand them.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

TOP. Dut. Top; Ger. Topf; Fr. Toupie, toupier, to turn or cast, to whirl about like a top.
(Cotgrave.) Dut. Toppen; Ger. Toben, vertete et verti: circum agere, et circumagi, to turn or be turned; to drive or be driven around. The Fr. Dut. and Ger. verbs seem all used conse-quentially. And a top may be—

That which (when spinning) stands upon, moves upon its tip or point; or which keeps its top, crown, or head up.

TOP

He that hath been cradled in majesty, and used to crowns and scepters; will not leave the throne to play with beggars at put-pin, or be fond of tops and cherry stones.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 24.

Careful, besides, the whirling top to whip,
And drive her giddy, till she fell asleep.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 3.

TO'PARCH. } Gr. Τοπος, a place, and αρχος, TO'PARCHY. } the chief, from αρχ-ειν, to be head or chief.

The head or chief of a place (or district.)

They are not to be conceived potent monarchs, but toparchs or kings of narrow territories.
Brown. Vulgar Errors.

As for the rest of Judæa, it is divided into ten governments or territories, called, toparchies.
Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 4.

TO'PAZE. Fr. Topaze; It. Topazio; Sp.
Topacio; Lat. Topazius. See the quotation.

The topaze or chrysolith, hath a singular greene colour by it selfe, for which it is esteemed verie rich; and when it was first found, it surpassed all others in price: they were discovered first in an isle of Arabia called Chitis, wherein certain rovers [Troglydites] beeing newly landed, after they had ben driven thither by tempest and urged with famine, began to feed upon hearbs and dig for roots, and by that means met with the topaze stone: this is the opinion of Archelaus. But K. Juba reporteth that there is an island within the red sea called Topazas, distant from the continent 300 stadia, the which is oftentimes so mistie, that sailers have much adoe to find it, whereupon it tooke that name: for in the Troglydites language (saith he) topazin is as much to say, as to search or seeke for a thing.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 8.

Mr. Banks brought a few topazes and amethysts as specimens: of the topazes there are three sorts, of very different value.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

TOPE, v. } I know not, (says Skinner,) whe-TO'PER. } ther from the Ger. Topff, a pot, or from toppen, to turn about, (see TOP, n.) or (and this he prefers) from the Dut. Toppen, to rave, i.e. to drink till mad. To tope has most probably the same origin as to tipple, qv.

To tip off (the liquor); to turn up the tip, top, or edge of the vessel, till all is drunk; to drink constantly, to excess,—till drunk.

This Mufti in my conscience is some English renegade,
he talks so savourily of toping.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act i. sc. 1.

The jolly members of a toping club,
Like pipe-staves, are but hoop'd into a tub,
And in a close confederacy link;
For nothing else but only to hold drink.
Butler. Epigram on a Club of Sots.

The cobbler retains his appellation after he has shut up his stall, and sits among his fellow topers at the two-penny club.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 5.

TOPHA'CEOUS. Lat. Tofus or tophus, lapis cavernosus et mollis, a soft, porous stone. See Vossius.

It [milk] differs from a vegetable emulsion by coagulating into a curdy mass with acids, which chyle and vegetable emulsions will not. Acids, mixed with them, precipitate a tophaceous chalky matter, but not a cheesy substance.
Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 4.

TO'PIARY. Fr. Topiaire, the making of images in, or arbors of, plants, (Cotgrave.) Lat.
Topiarus. It is applied to—Cutting trees or hedges into particular forms or shapes.

No topiary hedge of quickset
Was e'er so neatly cut thick set.
Butler. Sat. upon the Weakness and Misery of Man.

TO'PICK, adj. } Fr. Topique; It. Tòpico;

Local,—of or pertaining to place.

Topick, n.—a place; topicks, books or places,
of logical invention.

The men of Archenfeld, in Hereford-shire, claimed by custom to lead the van-guard; but surely this priveledge was topical, and confined to the Welsh wars, with which the aforesaid men, as borderers, were best acquainted.
Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

O all ye topic gods, that do inhabit here,
To whom the Romans did those ancient altars rear,
Oft found upon those hills, now sunk into the soils,
Which they for trophies left of their victorious spoils.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 30.

TOR

The places ought before the application of those topick medicines, to be well prepared with the razour, and a sinapisme or rubicative made of mustard-seed, untill the place look red.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 6.

So that in this question by [reason] I do not mean a distinct topick but a transcendent that runs through all topicks; for reason, like logick, is instrument of all things else.—Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 10.

So that the rules of order being neither of these are but topical, and limited, and transient.

Id. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

The temper of their dung and intestinal excretions do

Phænigmus or rubifying medecine.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 3.

The polytheism, superstition and idolatry of Egypt, appear so monstrous in the light in which we view them, that they furnish the principal topicks of every declamation against the theology of paganism.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 3. On Monotheism.

We are much to blame, that we banish religious topicks from our discourse; which might be, if properly introduced, the most delightful part of it.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 16.

These topics or loci, were no other than general ideas applicable to a great many different subjects, which the orator was directed to consult, in order to find out materials for his speech.—Blair, Lect. 32.

In our topographie we have at large set fourth and described the site of the land of Ireland, the natures of sundrie things therein contained, the woonderous & strange prodigies which are in the same, and of the first origin of that nation, euen from the first beginning vntill this our time.
Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, Pref.

At this time was seene a woman who had a great beard, and a man vpon hir backe, as a horse; of whom I have alreadie spoken in my topographie.—Id. Ib. c. 11.

First therefore touching the topographical description of the place.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 93.

The fourth proposal was, whether there might not be added some appendices to the Bible, as chorographical and topographical tables, genealogies, and the like.
Hales. Lett. from the Synod of Dort. Nov. 1618.

I may the better present you the topographic description of this mighty empire.—Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 58.

My defects will be perfectly supplyd by such who shall topographically treat of this subject in relation to this county alone.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

TOP'PLE. Dim. of Top.

To come top foremost; to fall or throw top or head forwards; headlong.

Though castles topple on their warders' heads:
Though pallaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations: answer me
To what I aske you.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 1.

— He look no more,
Least my braine turne, and the deficient sight
Topple downe headlong.
Id. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for three-foot stoole, mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, downe topples she,
And tailour cries, and fells into a coffe.
Id. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act ii. sc. 1.

I am like some little cock-boat in a rough sea, which every billow topples up and downe, and threats to sink.
Bp. Hall. Breathings of the Devout Soul.

Sometimes the drunken dames pursue the drunken sire.
At last he topples over on the plain;
The Satyrs laugh, and bid him rise again.

TORCH. } Fr. Torche; It. Tòrcia, torchio; TO'RCHER. } Sp. Antorcha. The French called a wreathed straw, laid upon the head to place any thing weighty, torche; and Skinner derives either from the Lat. Torris, or from torquere, to twist (being made of twisted materials); but he prefers the former.

(Twisted) flax, thread, or other substance
(prepared for kindling and supplying light.)

For to a torche othr to a taper. the trinite is likenede.
Piers Plouhman, p. 330.

Within the saide Pyramides, no man doth know what there is, for that they haue no entrance, but in the one of them there is a hole where the wall is broken, and so we went in there, hauing torch-light with vs.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 281.

High time it seemed then for everie wight
Them to betake unto their kindly rest:
Eftsoones long waxen torches weren light
Unto their bowres to guyden every guest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

A sixt sort there is of these trees, and it is properly called teda, (i. the torch-tree:) the same yeeldeth more plentie of moisture and liquor than the rest.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 10.

Ere twice the horses of the sunne shall bring Their fiery torcher his diurnall ring.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 1.

High mountain countries, windy, and covered with snow, bear ordinarily trees that yeeld torch-wood and pitch, as pines, cone-trees, and such like.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 562.

We then had the town open before us, and presently saw lighted torches, or candles, all the town over; whereas before the gun was fir'd there was but one light.

That warr and various; sometimes on firm ground,
A standing fight, then soaring on main wing,
Tormented all the air; all air seemd then Conflicting fire.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

In which his torment often was so great,
That, like a lyon, he would cry and rore;
And rend his flesh; and his owne synwes eat.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

There are some persons so miserable and scrupulous, such perpetual tormentors of themselves with unnecessary fears, that their meat and drink is a snare to their conscience.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 9.

Fortune [I say] ordinarily commeth after to whip and punish them, as the scourge and tormentresse of glorie and honour.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 4.

But such as require more adoe to have their vices and sinnes cured, God committeth them to be punished after death to a second tormentresse, named Dice, that is to say, revenge.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 459.

The law indeed is still our rule, our guide, our governour, we are obliged to follow and obey it; but it ceases to be a tyrant over us, a tormentour of us.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 42.

Even these, when of their ill-got spoils possess'd,
Find such tormentors in the guilty breast:
Some voice of God close whispering from within,
'Wretch! this is villainy, and this is sin.'

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

One of the greatest privileges belonging to a state of religion, doth arise from this true fear of God as being that which must set us at liberty from all other tormentful fears.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 15.

When he was dry, he was afraid to drink
Too much at once, for fear his pond should sink,
Perpetually tormented with this thought,
He never ventur'd on a hearty draught.

Byrom. The Pond.

Betake thee to thy home, sad outcast from thy Maker's love! impatience of thy absence but aggravates thy child's distraction: nor long shall her debilitated frame support the tormentor's cruelty.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 38.

TORNADO. Sp. Tornado, from Tornar, to

More. Songs, &c. Notes, (1647.) p. 342.

The exercise of the intellective faculty makes it agil, quick & lively, yea though the object about which it is exercised be poor, little, and low, yet a man hath this advantage by the exercise of this faculty about it, that it keeps it from rust and torpidness, it enlargeth and habituates it for a due improvement even about nobler objects.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 3.

But there are others [insects], and some of them in their most perfect state too, that are able to subsist in a kind of torpitude or sleeping state, without any food at all.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 5.

A weighty body put into motion, is more easily impelled, than at first when it resteth: the cause is, partly because motion doth discusse the torpour of solid bodies.

Then gan they ransacke that same castle strong,
In which he found great store of hoorded threasure,
The which that tyrant gathered had by wrong
And tortious powre, without respect or measure.

Id. Id. b. iv. c. 9.

How can any of us see the body of our blessed Saviour broken, and his blood poured out; and, withal, think and know that his own sins are guilty of this tort offered to the Son of God, the Lord of life; and not feel his heart touched with a sad and passionate apprehension of his own vileness, and an indignation at his own wickedness that hath deserved and done this?—Bp. Hall. Ser. at Higham, an. 1648.

And we find that [in effect] all purgers have in them a raw spirit, or wind; which is the principall cause of tortion in the stomach, and belly.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 39.

Personal actions are such whereby a man claims a debt, or personal duty, or damages in lieu thereof: and, likewise, whereby a man claims a satisfaction in damages for some injury done to his person or property. The former are said to be founded on contracts, the latter upon torts or wrongs.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 8.

Or musical to charm the list'ning soul,

The compages of bones consists of four, which are so disposed, and so hinge upon one another, as that if the membrane, the drum of the ear, vibrate, all the four are put in motion together; and, by the result of their action, work the base of that which is the last in the series, upon an aperture which it closes, and upon which it plays, and which aperture opens into the tortuous canals that lead to the brain.—Paley. Naturall Theology, c. 3.

Experience soon shows us the tortuosities of imaginary rectitude, the complications of simplicity, and the asperities of smoothness.—Rambler, No. 122.

There are many tortoises both of land and sea kinde, their backs and bellies are shelled very thicke; their head, feet, and taile, which are in appearance, seeme ougly, as though they were members of a serpent or venomous beasts: but notwithstanding they are very good meat, as also their egges.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 274.

There be found tortoises in the Indian sea so great, that one only shell of them is sufficient for the rouse of a dwelling house. And among the islands principally in the red sea, they use tortoise shells ordinarily for boats and wherries upon the water.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 10.

Had the poor Indian philosopher (who imagined that the earth also wanted something to bear it up) but thought of this word substance, he needed not to have been at the trouble to find an elephant to support it, and a tortoise to support his elephant: the word substance would have done it effectually.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 13.

The hawksbill [turtle] (which affords the tortoise-shell) is

And when he was put to torture for it, he hardly escaped with great peril of his life to the Duke of Alva.

Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, (1570.)

"Fly, fly" he cries, "thyself whate'er thou art, Hell, hell already burns in every part."
So down into his torturers arms he fell,

That ready stood his funerals to yell,
And in a cloud of night to waft him quick to hell.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

"Thence by a mighty swain he soon was led Dryden. Ep. to the Duke of Guise.

Among us of late there seems to have been a barrenness of invention in this point (calling names), the words Whig and Tory, although they are not much above 30 years old, having been pressed to the service of many successions of parties, with very different ideas fastened to them. This distinction, I think, began towards the latter part of King Charles the Second's reign, was dropt during that of his successor, and then revived at the Revolution; since which it hath perpetually flourished, although applied to very different kinds of principles and persons.

For touch, n. (the sense,) see the quotations from Locke and Davies. To touch—
To feel by the sense of touch.

To be, or become in contact, or in conjunction;
to finger, to handle; to come close to, near to;
to reach, to approach, to approximate; to appertain;
to affect, to effect, to infect. Also—
To do or effect any thing, by a mere touch;
cursorily, without pressure, rest, or stay.

Touch, the n. is further applied, emphatically, to the right touch or feeling; that quality, those qualities, that cause such feelings; and hence—
A test or proof, a criterion, standard, sign, mark: also to—a mere touch, a dash, hit, stroke.
And further—to a pledge or contract, bargained or confirmed (perhaps) by touch of hand.

That "certainly I am about naught,
If that I speake of loue, & make it tough."

Id. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

He tooke an arrow full sharply whet,
And in his bowe when it was set,
He streight up to his eare drough
The strong bowe, that was so tough.—Id. Rom. of the R.

But if so is, that any wo
Maie fede a mans herte wele, Therof I haue at every meale,
Of plentie more than enough.
But that is of hym selfe so tough,
My stomake maie it not defie.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

If we ones be made moyste and toughe on this wyse thynge shall than be wantynge but the heate of thy charitie, whereby wee may bee decocte and made harde as stones, that is to saye, more strong & stedfast in fayth and good workes.—Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143.

Oure lorde of his goodnes shal chaunge and turne the softe and slypper dust sygnifyinge wretched synners in to toughe earth by wepyng and true penance for their synnes, and after that make theym harde as stone by brennyng charitie.
Id. Ib.

It [iron] is also of such toughnesse, that it yeeldeth to the making of claricord wire in some places of the realme.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 11.

— Stock fish is a dish,
If it be well drest, for the tuffness sake
Will make the proud'st of 'em long and leap for't.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Honest Man's Fortune, Act v.

Who have before or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly laboured, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early and late twilights to mid-day.
Donne. To Mr. J. W.

He try'd a third, a tough well-chosen spear;
Th' inviolable body stood sincere,
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But, scornful, offer'd his unshielded side.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

Hops off the kiln lay three weeks to cold, give, and toughen, else they will break to powder.
Mortimer. Husbandry.

'Twas not the fated sword his father bore;
But that his charioteer Metiscus wore.
Thus, while the Trojans fled, the toughness held;
But vain against the great Vulcanian shield.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xii.

In the first stage, the whole habit of the body ought to be relaxed; the viscosity or toughness of the fluids taken off by dilutents.—Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 4.

And, if he doom that people with a frown,
And mark them with a seal of wrath press'd down,
Obduracy takes place; callous and tough,
The reprobated race grows judgment proof.
Cowper. Table-Talk.

We found some inconvenience from the toughness of the ground which constantly broke the messenger, and gave us a great deal of trouble in getting up the anchors.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 5.

TOUPE'E. Fr. Toupée, a topping or tuft; a woman's hair laid out on her forehead; a horse's foretop, (Cotgrave.)

Whate'er of dunce in college or in town
Sneers at another, in toupees or gown.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

TOU

A pragmatial pleader, as soon as he has thrown a tie-wig

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 40.

TOUR. Fr. Tour, a turn, round, circle, compass, wheeling, revolution, circumvolution; also, a turn, bout, or walk, (Cotgrave.)

The whole tour of the passage is this: a man given to superstition can have no security, day or night, waking or sleeping: for occasions of it will force themselves upon him, against his will; do what he can to prevent them.
Bentley. Of Free-thinking, § 18.

For besides the synonymous words, and more literal interpretations lately proposed, a dexterous writer may oftentimes be able to give such a form (or, as the modern Frenchmen speak, such a tour) to his many ways variable expressions as to avoid the necessity of making use of the word nature.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 170.

But when the Centurion drove out to sea, and left the Commodore on shore, he one day, attended by some of his officers, endeavoured to make the tour of the island.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 5.

In so extensive a tour as the following pages contain, it must be supposed that a variety of very disgusting scenes of this kind would occur—scenes, in which nature was forced—in which she was arrayed in alien beauties—or overloaded with tawdry ornaments.
Gilpin. Of Cumberland, Pref.

Udal. Marke, Pref.

It cannot lightly bee a chast mayde, that is occupied with thinking on armor, and turney, and man's valiance.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 5.

But first was question made, which of those knights
That lately turneyd had the wager wonne:
There was it iudged, by those worthie wights,
That Satyrane the first day best had donne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

[Henric the King of France] was wounded in iusts at the

the hurts the tenth of Julie next ensuing.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1559.

In the late solemnitie of tournois and sword-fight at the sharpe, which Germanicus Cæsar exhibited to gratifie the people, the elephants were seen to shew pastime with leep-ing and keeping a stirre, as if they daunced, after a rude and disorderly manner.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 2.

The tourney is allow'd but one career,
Of the tough ash, with the sharp grinded spear,
But knights unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot their honour to regain.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Not but the mode of that romantic age,
The age of tourneys, triumphs, and quaint masques,
Glar'd with fantastic pageantry, which dimm'd
The sober eye of truth, and dazzled ev'n
The sage himself.—Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

Alternately they sung; now Spenser gan,
Of jousts and tourneys, and champions strong;
Now Milton sung of disobedient man,
And Eden lost. Lloyd. The Progress of Envy.

TOURN, or } Applied to a court held by the TURN. } sheriff. See the quotation from Bacon; and see ATTOURN.

The sheriff hath authority to hold two several courts of distinct natures, the turn because he keepeth his turn and circuit about the shire, holdeth the same court in several places, wherein he doth inquire of all offences perpetrated against the common law, and not forbidden by any statute or act of parliament; and the jurisdiction of this court is derived from justice distributive, and is for criminal offences, and held twice every year.—Bacon. Office of Constables, &c.

This is the origin of the sheriff's turn, which decided in all affairs, civil and criminal, of whatever importance, and from which there lay no appeal but to the Wittenagemote.
Burke. Abridgment of English History, b. ii. c. 7.

TOUSE, v. } To tose wool, carpere lanam

been so touz'd among 'em in my days.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Coxcomb, Act iii.

Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, at [or] toaze from thee thy businesse, I am therefore no courtier?
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

Thus age begins with touzing and with tumbling;
But grunts, and groans, and ends at last in fumbling
Dryden, Ep. 21.

And so the lion's huge and hideous roar
They think proceeds from his rugg'd flowing mane,
Which the fierce winds do tosse and tossell sone;
Unlesse perhaps he stirre his bushie train,
For then the tail will carrie it again.
More. Song of the Soul, pt. ii. v. 14.

As when we haply see a sickly woman fall Into a fit. She struggling still with those That gainst her rising pain their utmost strength oppose, Starts, tosses, tumbles, strikes, turns, touses, spurns and

TO'WY. } Tow, n.—that which tuggeth, or with which we tug or draw. Also,—

Tow (A. S. Tow, Dut. Touw), which Skinner thinks may be derived from the verb to tow or draw, because it may easily be drawn out or extended by the hand; but as tow is that which, the rope which, draws, the name may have been early applied to the material of which it was made.

And we shall make him balles eke also
Of wexe and towe, that whan he gapeth fast,
Into the beestes throte he shall hem cast,
To sleke his honger, and encomber his teeth.
Chaucer. Ariadne of Athens.

He made his archers binde theyr shaft heades about with

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 246.

And forthwith byndeth theym apprentyses to taylours, weyuers, towkers, and some tyme to coblers.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 14.

Now that part thereof which is utmost and next to the pell or rind, is called tow or hurds, and it is the worst of the line or flax, good for little or nothing but to make lamp-match or candle-wick.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

When they be sufficiently watered, you shall know by the skin or rind thereof if it be loose and readie to depart from the towie substance of the stem.—Id. Ib.

After they be well dried, they are to be beaten and punned in a great stone mortar, or upon a stone floore, with an hurden mallet or tow-beetle made for the purpose.—Id. Ib.

The third day after, we were relieved from this anxiety by the joyful sight of the long-boat's sails upon the water; on which we sent the cutter immediately to her assistance, who towed her along side in a few hours.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 2.

As she was hereby rendered incapable of making any sail for some time, we were under a necessity, as soon as a gale sprung up, to take her in tow.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

Towing is the operation of drawing a ship forward by means of ropes, extending from her fore-part to one or more rowing before her.—Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1. N. 4.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 1.

If I speake vnto Christian folks, what need I to tell what a mischiefe is toward, when straw and drie wood is cast into the fire?
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 5.

Thus being extract of the noble house of the kings of Westsaxons, he prooued in his youth a personage of great towardnesse, and such a one as no small hope was of him conceived.—Holinshed. Historie of England, b. v. c. 36.

Sir Thomas More was born in Milk-street within the city of London, an. 1480, trained up in grammar learning in St. Anthony's school there, and afterwards received into the family of Card: Joh. Moreton, Archb. of Canterbury, merely for the towardliness of his person, and the great hopes that the pregnancy of his parts then promised.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

The son Robert Parsons being a child of a very great towardliness, and very apt to learn, was by his father's endeavours trained up in the English tongue.—Id. Ib.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

For my part, I am totally at a loss to comprehend how particles streaming from a centre should draw a body towards it.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

TO'WEL. Fr. Touaille; It. Tovaglia; Sp. Toalla. Skinner (says Wachter) derives the English from the French; Menage,—the French from the Italian; and Ferrarius,—the Italian from the Lat. Toralia, (sed duro partu, et sensu alieno nam mantilia non sunt lintea cubitoria.) The Ger. Zwele, tersorium ex linteo; Dut. Dwalle, dweil, he supposes to be so called, from its use in washing; by wiping and cleansing; and he derives from the Goth. Thwalian; A. S. Thwe-an, to wash; and Junius does so likewise. And a towel is—

A cloth to wipe (the wet away);—though perhaps of the same origin as Fr. Toil. See TOILET.

Also ye shall pray for them that find any light in this church, or give any behests, book, bell, chalice or vestment, surplice, water-cloath, or towel, lands, rents, lamp or light, or any other adornments, whereby God's service is the better served, sustained and maintained in reading and singing.—Burnet. Records, vol. ii. pt. ii. b. i. No. 8.

And the same daye Thyrry of Sonayne was stryken with a quarell in the arme, so y^t in a moneth after he coulde not ayde hymselfe wyth y^t arme, but bare it in a towell.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 254.

My mothers maidens when they do sowe and spinne, They sing a song made of a feldishe mouse: That for bicause her liuelod was but thinne, Would nedes go se her townish sisters house.
Wyat. Of the meane and sure Estate.

Telling him how the victualler had cast his body into a dung-cart, and that if he would get up timely in the morn- ing, and watch at the town-gate, he might thereby discover the murder: which he did accordingly, and so saw justice done on the murderer.
More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 16.

Our enemies are easie to be surprised and caught, when they are so lazie and idle, as to suffer hares to lie and har- bour hard under their city walls, even within the trench and town-ditch.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 375.

There, in the forum, swarm a numerous train, The subject of debate, a townsman slain: One pleads the fine discharg'd, which one deny'd, And bade the public and the laws decide.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Tithings, towns or villis, are of the same signification in law. The word town or vill is indeed, by the alteration of times and language, now become a generical term, com- prehending under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns.
Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. § 4. Introd.

Since the downfal of the Roman empire, the policy of Europe has been more favourable to arts, manufactures, and commerce, the industry of towns, than to agriculture, the industry of the country.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, Introd.

A toy, generally, is—

Any shewy trinket, a plaything, a play or sport;
a trifle; any thing trifling, or fanciful. To toy—
To play or sport, to trifle, to dally.

But when he knew not how to reply, then would he fall to touching and toying, still viewing his graces in no glass, but self liking.—Sidney. Arcadia b. iii.

And whan she had made them a true and honest aunswere, they lawhed, toyed, and scorned, demaundaynge of her, if she were not ashamed of that doynge.
Bale. English Volaries, pt. ii.

As frankly disposed as your chaplayn was to tryfle & to toy with my dyffuycion, as he scornfully calleth it, which it is and it is not, yet is he in the ende compelled to agre wyth me therin.—Id. Apologie, fol. 27.

The last kind of toiesh curs are named dansers, and those being of a mongrell sort also, are taught & exercised to danse in measure at the muscally sound of an instrument.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 7.

Whiles thus she talked, and whiles thus she toyd, They were far past the passage which he spake, And come unto an island waste and voyd, That floted in the midst of that great lake.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

"This is my rest: if more I knewe I should but know too much, Or build in my conceited mayne Too high aboue my touch, Or else against the hare in all Prove toyous."—Warner. Albion's Englands, b. v. c. 27.

They prophane holy baptisme in toying foolishly, for that they aske questions of an infant which cannot answer, and speake vnto them as was wont to be spoken vnto men.
Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. v. § 64. Note.

The law of Christ requiring therefore faith and newnesse of life in all men by vertue of the couenant which they make in baptisme, is it toyish that the church in baptisme exacteth at euery mans hands an expresse profession of faith, an irrevocable promise of obedience by way of solemne stipulation?—Id. Ib.

VOL. II.

Your society will discredit that toyishness of wanton fancy that plays tricks with words, and frolicks with the caprices of frothy imagination.—Glanvill. Scepsis.

It quick'ned next a toyful ape, and so Gamesome it was, that it might freely go From tent to tent, and with the children play.
Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

Love, like other little boys, Cries for hearts, as they for toys; Which, when gain'd, in childish play Wantonly are thrown away.—Rochester. A Dialogue.

Adieu, ye toyish reeds, that once could please My softer lips, and lull my cares to ease.
Pomfret. Dies Novissima.

We were resolved to reward them to their hearts content. This we did by giving them beads, knives, scissars, and looking-glasses, which we bought of the privateers crew; and a half dollar a man from each of us: which we would have bestowed in goods also, but could not get any, the privateer having no more toys.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

So Lucy lov'd and lightly toy'd, And laugh'd at harmless maids who marry.
E. Moore, s. 4.

We saw their machine for clearing cotton of its seeds, which is made upon the same principles as those in Europe, but is so small that it might be taken for a model, or a toy: it consists of two cylinders like our round rulers, somewhat less than a inch in diameter.

a tract, (Lat. Tractatus, Fr. Traicte), is,—

A treatise,—any writing, book, essay, discourse, dissertation, disquisition, &c. (see TREAT.)
Tractable is treatable, or that may be drawn or led; induced to come or go, or do, as we wish; manageable, governable, compliant, obedient.

To trace,—to proceed or go, to proceed in, after, in search or pursuit of; in a path or course gone; to pursue or follow vigilantly or carefully.

Tracery,—in architecture.

If he might find hole or trace, Where through that me mote forth by pace, Or any gappe, he did it close.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Yet may he go his brede begging Fro dore to dore, he may go trace, Till he the remnaunt may purchase.—Id. Ib.

That man setteth before hys eyes the worst ensauple or patarne that can be, whoso foloweth the trace and steppes of the multitude.—Udal. Marke, c. 8.

Then we sayled north 16 leagues by estimacion, after that north and by west, & northnorthwest, then southeast, with diuers other courses, trauesing and tracing the seas, by reason of sundry and manifolde contrary windes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 235.

I haue put the said sermons in writing for to be impressed that al those persōs that entētifely reade or heare them may be stirred the better to trace the way of eternall saluacion.
Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Prol.

His false semblance, that turneth as a ball, With faire and amorous daunce, made me be traced, And where I had my thought and minde araced From earthly frailnesse, and from vaine pleasure, Me from my rest he toke and set in error.
Wyatt. Complaint epon Loue, &c.

Fyrst parentes care, to bring their children forth, To breede them then, to bring them vp in youth, To match them eke, with wightes of greatest worth, To see them taught, the trusty tracks of trueth.
Gascoigne. From the Glasse of Gouvernment.

This olde man his sonne tracking the foxe so running away, came to that pit whereof I spake, and in the bottome thereof he found many bones of dead men.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 84.

1953

Howbeit, though faire & pleasaunt wordes were given for the tyme, yet by delays the matier was alwaies tracked, & put over, without any fruitfull determination.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. Originals No. 13.

This in tracte of tyme made hym welthy, and by meane of this welthines ensued pryde.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 56.

So contrarywyse maye they with lesse leopardye bee parted, then Telemachus parted the swardplayers: fyrste bycause they are christen men, and secondarylye, because the more noble courage and stomacke they bee of, the more tractable they are.—Id. S. Marke, Pref.

Neither if he haue not the knowlege of sterres, he maye vnderstande poetes, whiche in description of tymes (I omitt other thynges) they traict of the risinge and goinge downe of planettes.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 15.

So nothing is by kinde so voide Of vice, and with such vertue fraught, But it by vs may be anoide, And brought in tract of time too naught.
Turberville. That all Things are as they are used.

Hitherto pertaineth the precept of clemencye and mercy for kinges, which is to do well to the good men decerning the good and lerned from the euill & vnlearned, & to moderate the punisshments of the tractable and curable, and to sup- presse the obstinate vncurable.
Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 1.

When they [the Scotch] are gentle intreated, and with courteous moderation, they are found to be verie tractable and pliant vnto reason.—Holinshed. Des. of Scotland, c. 13.

Willful opinion and tractabilite (which is to be shortly perswaded and meued) makith cōstance, a vertue.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 21.

I would not seeme in my tractation of antiquities, to trouble my reader with the rehersall of anie new inconue- niences.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 9.

"Thus having past all perill, I was come Within the compasse of that islands space; The which did seeme, unto my simple doome, The onely pleasant and delightfull place That ever troden was of footings trace."
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

Yet he therewith so felly still did rave, That scarce the squire his hand could once upreare But, for advantage, ground unto him gave, Tracing and trauesing, now here, now there.
Id. Ib. c. 7.

Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice.—Howell.

Pliny the only man among the Latins who is a diligent tracer of the prints of nature's footsteps.
Hakewill. On Providence, p. 164.

1 Sayl. Here's nothing, sir, but poverty and hunger; No promise of inhabitance; neither track of beast, Nor foot of man.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iv.

As little do we intend to touch on those small tracks of ground, the county of Poole, and the like.
Fuller. Worthies. General.

Most remarkable was his skill in mathematicks, being accounted the Archimedes of that age, having written many tractates in that faculty, which carry with them a very good regard at this day.—Id. Ib. Wiltshire.

Moreouer, he [Fabius] thought good they should send aid to their subjects, and other their allies and confederates as need required, to keep their cities still under their obe- dience: and in the mean season by tract of time, to wear out Hannibals force and power.—North. Plutarch, p. 152.

For when he [Crassus] should presently haue gone on still, and entred into Babylon and Seleucia (cities that were ever enemies unto the Parthians) he traced time, and gaue them leisure to prepare to encounter his force when he should come against them.—Id. Ib. p. 474.

Those things that Ulrichus Velenus says against it in a tractate on purpose on that subject and published by Gol- dastus in his third tome, are not inconsiderable allegations and arguments for the negative.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

Where birds with painted oars did ne'er Row through the trackless ocean of the air.
Cowley. The Muse.

Fragile, tough; flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile.—Bacon. Nat. Historie, § 839.

Silver whose ductility and tractility are much inferiour to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet.—Derham.

He [Horace] observes no method that I can trace, what- ever Scaliger the father, or Heinsius, maye haue seen, or rather think they had seen.—Dryden. Aeneis, Ded.

And such is Virgil's episode of Dido and Æneas; where the sourest critic must acknowledge, that if he had deprived his Æneis of so great an ornament, because he found no traces of it in antiquity, he had avoided their unjust censure, but had wanted one of the greatest beauties of his poem.

Dryden. Æneis, Ded.

From the Spanish trade in the South-seas running all in one track from north to south, with very little deviation to the eastward or westward, it is in the power of two or three cruisers, properly stationed in different parts of this track, to possess themselves of every ship that puts to sea.

Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 9.

— Methinks she should have left
A track so bright I might have follow'd her;
Like setting suns that vanish in a glory.

Dryden. The Rival-Ladies, Act i. sc. 1.

— The wild-duck, hence,
O'er the rough moss, and o'er the trackless waste
The heath-hen flutters, pious fraud! to lead
The hot pursuing spaniel far astray.—Thomson. Spring.

And, lest the printed footsteps might be seen,
He dragg'd them backwards to his rocky den;
The tracks averse, a lying notice gave,
And led the searcher backward from the cave.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. viii.

— Excuse an old man's warmth.
What are these wondrous civilizing arts,
This Roman polish, and this smooth behaviour,
That render man thus tractable and tame?

Addison. Cato, Act i. sc. 4.

Indeed, the common men, I presume, were not the less tractable for their want of spirituous liquors.

Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 3.

It will be [tis like objected] that whatsoever I fancy of the tractableness of children, and the prevalency of those softer ways of shame and commendation, yet there are many who will never apply themselves to their books, and to what they ought to learn, unless they are scourged to it.

Locke. Of Education, § 86.

In this chart I have laid down no land, nor traced out any shore but what I saw myself, and thus far it may be depended upon; the bays and inlets, of which we saw only the openings, are not traced.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 6.

Thus much indeed, I think appears from the lectures of anatomists, that the last action of the machine traceable by their science, that is, the inner ends of our nerves, stretch over a much larger compass than the sphere of the mind's presence can be supposed to extend to.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 31.

If attraction be what Cotes, with many other Newtonians, thought it to be, a primordial property of matter, not dependent upon, or traceable to, any other material cause; then, by the very nature and definition of a primordial property, it stood indifferent to all laws.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

The tracteries and construction do not agree with the rude arts of such a barbarous and early period.

Warton. History of Kiddington, p. 15.

— Her track, where'er the goddess roves,

As shepherdes curre, that in dark eveninges shade
Hath traced forth some salvage beastes trade.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

For of his wicked pelf his god he made,
And unto Hell him selfe for money sold:

Accursed usury was all his trade;
And right and wrong ylike in equall ballaunce waide.

Id. Ib. b. i. c. 4.

The busy lawyer, wrangling in his pleas,
Findeth that beauty gives his labour ease:
The toiling tradesman, and the sweating clown,
Would have his wench fair, though his bread be brown.

Drayton. Edw. IV. to Mrs. Shore.

What is the desire of my soule, but that all this could make you in love with godlinesse; that instead of the ambitions of honour, the tradings for wealth, the pursuit of pleasure, your hearts could be set on fire with the zealous affectation of true godlinesse.—Bp. Hall. The Hypocrite.

Far from the cows' and goats' insulting crew,
That trample down the flowers, and brush the dew:
The painted lizard, and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away.
The titmouse, and the pecker's hungry brood,
And Progne, with her bosom stain'd in blood:
These rob the trading citizens, and bear
The trembling captives through the liquid air;
And for their callow young a cruel feast prepare.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

The poor man's pocket is a bank for our money, which never can disappoint or deceive us: all the rich traders in the world may decay and break; but the poor man can never fail, except God himself turn bankrupt.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

Whom, with a wig so wild, and mien so maz'd,
Pity mistakes for some poor tradesman craz'd.

Pope. To Lord Bathurst, Epis. 3.

Trade-winds are such as do blow constantly from one point or quarter of the compass; and the region in the world most peculiar to them is from about 30 d. north, to 30 d. south of the equator.

Dampier. Voyages. A Discourse of Winds.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

In our passage to the island of St. Catherine's, we found the direction of the trade-winds to differ considerably from what we had reason to expect, both from the general histories given of these winds, and the experience of former navigators.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 4.

1954

In the mean time those who remained in the canoes traded with our people very fairly for what they happened to have with them.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

A bank cannot, consistently with its own interest, advance to a trader the whole, or even the greater part of the circulating capital with which he trades.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 2.

Here temples rise, amid whose hallow'd bounds
Spires the black pine, while thro' the naked street,
Once haunt of *trade*ful merchants, springs the grass.

Warton. The Pleasures of Melancholy.

— O'er generous glebe, o'er golden mines
Her beggar'd, famish'd, tradeless native roves.

tation from Taylor.

Tradition is usually distinguished from—genuine and authentic written documents, or records.

Se ghe that no man disseyue ghou bi filosofie and veyn fallace aftir the tradicion of men, aftir the elementis of the world, and not aftir Crist.—Wiclif. Colocensis, c. 2.

Beware lest any man come & spile you thorow philosophye and deceitfull vanitie, the traditions of menne, & ordinaunces after the world, and not after Christe.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore, britheren, stonde ghe and holde ghe the traditions that ghe han lerned eithir bi word eithir bi oure epistle.—Wiclif. 2 Tessal. c. 2.

Tradition is any way of delivering a thing, or word to another; and so every doctrine of Christianity is by tradition. I have deliver'd unto you, saith Saint Paul, that Christ died for our sins.—Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 3.

This I may call a charitable curiosity, if true what is traditioned; that, about the reign of king Henry the seventh, the owner thereof built it in a dear year, on purpose to employ the more poor people thereupon.

Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

The whole order of proceeding herein is in sundry traditional writings set down by their great interpreters and scribes, which taught them that a trespass between a man and his neighbour can never be forgiven till the offender have by restitution made recompence for wrongs done.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vi.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day; if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus, were built by Sardanapalus both in one day, according to the inscription of his monument.—Brown. Vulg. Errours, b. vii. c. 18.

Yet we have but little extant of them but poetical raptures and fictions, and those also but in fragments and pieces traditionally preserved in subsequent authors.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 135.

Well upon this accident the speaker call'd to a gentleman whom he had observed to write the words; and to him they appealed, and he told them that which I supposed was said, but wholly differing from them that spake it, the traditionary part of the parliament.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, Introd.

The eastern traditioners mean by this a continual sadness or contristation of heart.

Gregory. Notes on Script. (ed. 1684.) p. 123.

If we say a constant catholick traditive interpretation of scripture does teach us, that Christ did institute the presbyterate together with episcopacy, and made the apostles presbyters as well as bishops; this is true.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy asserted, § 9.

There were in the church itselfe traditors, content to deliuer vp the bookes of God by composition, to the end their owne liues might bee spared.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 62

The good old bishops took a simpler way;
Each ask'd but what he heard his father say.
Or how he was instructed in his youth,
And by tradition's force upheld the truth.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. ii.

There can be no evidence that any traditional revelation is of divine original, in the words we receive it, and in the sense we understand it, so clear and so certain, as that of the principles of reason.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 18.

But Scripture has a much greater force in the hands of St. Athanasius and of St. Basil, (who viewed it in its true, that is, in its original and traditionary sense, and under the lights of faith,) than it has in Dr. Waterland's.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 254.

We are not able to ascertain who the Masorites or traditionists were, that settled the present standard of the Hebrew Scriptures.—Pilkington. Rem. on Scripture, p. 15.

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

A deed takes effect only from this tradition or delivery.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

It consists principally in an acquaintance with the names and ranks of different Eatuas or subordinate divinities, and the opinions concerning the origin of things, which have been traditionally preserved among the order in detached sentences.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 19.

The Romanists indeed tell us of one [rule] which they speak of in very high terms; and that is the traditionary doctrine of what they call the Catholic church.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 30.

What can be the traditionary knowledge of a chicken hatched in an oven?—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

To transmit, to transfer, (to translate;) to convey, to confer; to descend, to derive, (met.) to draw away from, (sc. privacy or security, before the public, into notice; and hence),—to expose (to derision, scorn, or infamy;) to defame, to scandalize, to vilify, to detract.

Oftentimes the auctours and writers are dispraised, not of them that can traduce and compose workes: but of them that cannot vnderstande them, and yet lesse reade them.

Golden Boke, Prol.

In this case I confesse to deserue no merites for my traduction or any fame, but I demaunde pardon of all them that be sage, for the faultes that thei shall finde therein.

Id. Ib.

And for means of employment, that which is most traduced to contempt is, that the government of youth is commonly allotted to them. . . But how unjust this traducement is (if you will reduce things from popularity of opinion to measure of reason) may appear in that, we see men are more curious what they put into a new vessel, than into a vessel seasoned; and what mould they lay about a young plant, than about a plant a corroborate.

Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b. i.

It is not in the power of parents to traduce holinesse to their children.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Angell & Zacharie.

O! were these worthy bishops now alive, how highly would they disdain to be praised by such a pen, by which king James their lord and master is causelessly traduced!

Fuller. Worthies. Cambridgeshire.

My name perhaps among the circumcis'd
In Dan, in Judah, and the bordering tribes,
To all posterity may stand defam'd,
With malediction mention'd, and the blot
Of falshood most unconjugal traduct't.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

'Twere a concealement worse then a theft,
No lesse then a traducement,
To hide your doings, and to silence that
Which to the spire, and top of prayes vouch'd,
Would seeme but modest.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 9.

Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages.—Hale.

Words not appearing in the Latine Britannia; and therefore Holland herein no translator of Camden, but traducer of Ripley.—Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire.

And if these weapons reach not yet far enough, he found both spears and arrows in the mouths of his traducers.

Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead.

Things translated into another tongue lose of their primitive vigour and strength, unless a paraphrastic version be permitted; and then the traduct may exceed the original, not otherwise, tho the version be never so punctual.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 46.

For how this newly-created soul is infused by God, no man knows; nor how, if it be traducted from the parents, both their souls contribute to the making up a new one.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 13.

What with traduction, what with education, it were strange if we should miss any of our parents' misdispositions.—Bp. Hall. Cont. John Baptist Beheaded.

Besides the relation of the traduction of the severa nations of the world from the sons of Noah, delivered by Moses in that short pedigree or extract, Gen. 10, we have very many probable evidences of the consent of all succeeding ages to that genealogy of the world.

Hale. Orig. of Mankind, p. 182

Who libel senates, and traduce the great,
Measure the public good by private hate:
Interest's their rule of love; fierce to oppose
All whom superior virtue makes their foes.

Yalden, Fable 8.

There may be perhaps who will say, that the soul, together with life, sense, &c. are propagated by traduction from parents to children, from them to their children again, and so from eternity: and that therefore nothing can be collected from the nature of them as to the existence of a Deity. Ans. If there could be such a traduction, yet to suppose one traduced to come from another traduced, and so ab æterno, without any further account of the original of mankind, or taking in any author of his traductive power, is the same as to suppose an infinite series of moved without a mover, or of effects without a cause: the absurdity of which is shewn already.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, § 5.

But as it is a species of folly all parties are apt to give into, it may not be amiss to consider this matter of traductive customs a little more particularly.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. § 6.

TRAFFICK, n.	Fr. Traffique ; It. Traffico ;
TRAFFICK, v.	Sp. Trafico ; Skinner says,
TRAFFICKABLE.	all of Arabian origin. Junius
TRAFFICKER.	forms it from It. and Sp.

Trato, (see TRADE,) traticare, traticare. It is applied to—

Buying, selling, or bartering; commerce; mercantile business; occupation or employment in merchandize; in marketing, in cheapening.

The tents were furnished with flesh, fish, skins, and other trifles: amongst the which was found a boxe of nailes: whereby we did coniecture, that they had either artificers amongst them, or els a traffike with some other nation.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 40.

This his enterprise is onely groundd upon an honest intent, to establish trade of merchandise with your subjects, and with other strangers traffiking in your realmes.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 341.

We do therefore especially ordeine, constitute and prouide by these patents that the saide Edward Osborne shall be gouernour of all such as by vertue of these our letters patents, shall be parteners, aduenturers, or traffiquers in the said trade, during the said terme of seuen yeeres, if hee so long liue.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 147.

During which space that she thus sicke did lie,
It chaunst a sort of merchants, which were wount
To skim those coastes for bondmen there to buy,
And by such traffike after gaires to hunt,
Arrived in this isle.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 11.

Then came Philætiis (a chiefe of men)
That to the woosers all-deuoring den
A barren steepe draue, and fat goats; for they
In custome were, with traffiquers by sea,
That who they would sent; and had vitterance there.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

A mart town this was, whereunto resorted the Phrygians that border neere unto it, for to trafficke and furnish themselves with merchandise.—Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 32.

Money it self is not onely the price of all commodities in all civil nations, but it is also, in some cases, a traffiqueable commodity: the price whereof rises, and falls in several countries upon occasion, and yieldeth either profit or losse in the exchange.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 1. Case 1.

As soon as he came aboard he gave leave to his subjects to traffick with us; and then our people bought what they had a mind to.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

Of all the race of animals, alone
The bees have common cities of their own,
And common sons, beneath one law they live,
And with one common stock their traffike drive.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

They were I believe between thirty and forty, and they trafficked with us for cocoa-nuts and other fruit, to all appearance as friendly as ever.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 9.

Leet these to some fell trafficker in slaves
Be sold, transported in remotest climes
To witness Greek severity on vice.

Glover. The Athenaid, b. xiii.

TRAGEDY.	Fr. Tragédie , tragique ; It.
TRAGE'DIAN.	Tragedia , trágico ; Sp. Tragedia , trágico ; Lat. Tragedia ;
TRAGE'DIOUS.	Gr. Τραγωδία , quasi hircicen ,
TRA'GICK.	dicas , from τραγος , hircus , and

TRA'GICAL.	goat. (See Vossius. See
TRA'GICALY.	the quotations from Chaucer,
TRA'GICALNESS.	B. Jonson, and Twining.) Tragedy is applied generally to—

Any distressful, calamitous, mournful—story or event. A tale or story or event of woe, misery or wretchedness.

"Tragedie is to sayn a certain storie,
As olde bookes maken us memorie,
Of him that stood in gret prosperitee,
And is yfallen out of high degree
In to miserie, and endeth wretchedly."

Chaucer. The Monkes Prologue, v. 13,979.

But glorie, how deceivable and howe foull is it oft? For whiche thing, not skilfully a tragedien, that is to sayne maker of dities that highten tragedyes, cried and sayde. O glory glory (quod he) thou nart nothinge els to thousandes of folks but a sweller of eares [aurium inflatio.]

Id. Boecius, b. iii.

For this is the ende of this tragedye, thus gothe out their playe, euen then whē thei thinke to be but in y^e middis of their mater.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

Of whom tedious it is to me to wryte the tragedyous history, except that I remembre that good it is to wryte and put in remembrance the punysshment of synners.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1573.

Noble valeant princes fortunat in all their affayers, warres, & victories, neuer shrinking nor flying bak, haue there bene, which at last haue bene cowardly broken & casten downe of their owne lustis & haue had a miserable tragik ende.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 8.

They counted Jesus for an ignoraunte persone, and auaunted and sette out them selues among the symple & vnlearned people, what with their magnifiquie and hie tytles, and what with their tragicall and maskyng apparell, as though they hadde bene almoste God Almyghtyes peeres.—Udal. Marke, c. 12.

Wherewith I will conclude this narration and description of New-found land, and proceede to the rest of our voyage, which ended tragically.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 154.

Thespiis is said to be the first found out

The tragedy, and carried it about,
Till then unknown, in carts, wherein did ride
Those that did sing, and act: their faces dy'd
With lees of wine.—B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetry.

Thence what the lofty grave tragedians taught
In Chorus or Iambic, teachers best
Of moral prudence, with delight receiv'd
In brief sententious precepts while they treat
Of fate, and chance, and change in human life.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

He too that did in tragic verse contend
For the vile goat, soon after forth did send
The rough rude satyrs naked.

B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetry.

And forth yssewd, as on the readie flore
Of some theatre, a grave personage
That in his hand a braunch of laurell bore,
With comely haveour and count'nance sage,
Yclad in costly garments fit for tragicke stage.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

But I shall sadly sing, too tragickly inclin'd,
Some subiect sympathizing with my melancholious mind.

Stirling. Avrora, son. 102.

Sith that the greatest often are oppress'd,
And unawares doe into daunger fall,
And, ye, that read these ruines tragicall,
Learne, by their losse, to love the low degree.

Spenser. The Ruines of Rome.

His tragi-comical life had a peaceable end in plenty and in prosperity.—Fuller. Worthies. Leicestershire.

At first the tragedy was devoid of art;
A song; where each man danc'd and sung his part;
And, of god Bacchus roaring out the praise,
Sought a good vintage for their jolly days.

Dryden. Art of Poetry.

The first tragedians found that serious style
Too grave for their uncultivated age,
And so brought wild and naked satyrs in.

Roscommon. Horace. Art of Poetry.

Our author Forrest hath also written in old English verse the tragedious troubles of the most chaste and innocent Joseph, son to the holy patriarch Jacob.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

When Thespiis first expos'd the tragic muse,
Rude were the actors, and a cart the scene,
Where ghastly faces, stain'd with lees of wine,
Frighted the children, and amus'd the crowd.

Roscommon. Horace. Art of Poetry.

He took the method which was prescribed him by his own genius; which was sharp and eager; he could not rally, but he could declaim; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically.

Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

Like bold Phaetons we despise all benefits of the Father of Light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicallness of the event as in the insolence of the undertaking.—Decay of Christian Piety.

As in a play of the English fashion, which we call a tragi-comedy, there is to be but one main design.

Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

Tragedy, then, is an imitation of some action that is important, entire, and of a proper magnitude—by language, embellished and rendered pleasurable, but by different means in different parts—in the way, not of narration, but of action—effecting through pity and terror, the correction and refinement of such passions.

Twining. Aristotle. Treatise on Poetry, pt. ii. § 1.

Poets formerly admitted any story into the number of tragic subjects; but now, the subjects of the best tragedies are confined to a few families—to Alcmæon, Œdipus, Orestes, Meleager, Thyestes, Telephus, and others, the sufferers, or the authors, of some terrible calamity.

Twining. Aristotle. Treatise on Poetry, pt. ii. § 12.

The prejudiced admirers of the antients are very angry at the least insinuation that they had any idea of our barbarous tragi-comedy.—Id. Ib. Note 33.

It appears, indeed, to me, that we may plainly trace in the Greek tragedy, with all its improvements, and all its beauties, pretty strong marks of its popular and tragi-comic origin.—Id. Ib.

TRAJECT, n. } Fr. Trajecter; It. Trajet-
TRAJECT, v. } tare; Lat. Trajicere, trajec- TRAJECTION. } tum, to throw or cast over or TRAJECTORY. } across, or through. See TRAJET.

A traject,—a passage or ferry. Fr. Traject.

To traject,—to throw or cast, to pass or cause to pass, over, or through; to transmit, to trans-pose.

Trajectory, (Paley)—the course, or orbit, through which a planet is thrown or passed.

And looke, what notes and garments he doth giue thee;
Bring them I pray thee with imagin'd speed Unto the traiect, to the common ferrie
Which trades to Venice.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 4.

There is an exaltation and fortification of our sight and thereupon a trajection of the visuall beams through all earthly occurrents.—Bp. Hall. Remedy of Prophanesne.

I shall add, that if the sun beams be in a convenient manner trajected through a glass prism, and thrown upon some well shaded object within a room, the rainbow thereby painted on the surface of the body that terminates the beams, may oftentimes last longer than some colours have produced in certain bodies.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 691.

Having sometimes had the curiosity to observe whether the beams of the sun near the horizon trajected through a very red sky, would not (though such rednesses are taken to be but emphatical colours) exhibit the like colour; I found that the beams falling within a room upon a very white object, placed directly opposite to the sun, disclosed a manifest redness, as if they had passed through a coloured medium.—Id. Ib. p. 739.

Refraction has such a stroke in the production of colours, as you cannot but have taken notice of, and perhaps admired in the colours generated by the trajection of light through drops of water that exhibit a rainbow, through prismatical glasses, and through divers other transparent bodies.

Id. Ib. p. 689.

Or, for the suffering of death, that by God's grace he might taste death for every man, crowned with glory and honour; for there seems to be such a trajection in the words.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

Of the vast scale of operation, through which our discoveries carry us, at one end we see an intelligent Power arranging planetary systems, fixing, for instance, the trajec-tory of Saturn, or constructing a ring of two hundred thousand miles diameter, to surround his body, and be suspended like a magnificent arch over the heads of his inhabitants; and, at the other, bending a hooked tooth, concerting and providing an appropriate mechanism, for the clasping and reclasping of the filaments of the feather of the humming-bird.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 27.

TRAJET. } Mr. Tyrwhitt, (who would TRAJETOUR. } find these words in no language TRAJETRY. } but our own,) has written very laboriously and very copiously upon them without arriving at any conclusion satisfactory to himself. It is singular that the Fr. Trajettaire, or Trajectaire, It. Tragettadore, (see Menage.) should have escaped his keen and careful researches. Skinner says,—perhaps—a trajiciendo, because he (the trajetour) throws his balls across (trajicit) from one hand to the other with such swiftness as to surpass the quickest motion of the eye; and in Cotgrave Fr. Trajectaire is,— A juggler, imposter, cousener.

For I did hem a trajetry,
They know not all my trajetrie.

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Through me hath many one deth receiued
That my trajet neuer apperceiued.

Id. Ib.

Go herber you elsewhere than here,
That han a lyer called me,
Two trajetours art thou and he,
That in mine house doe me this shame,
And for my soothsaw ye me blame.

Id. Ib.

My sonne as gyle vnder the hat
With sleightes of a trajetour
Is hid, enuie of suche colour
Hath yet the fourth deceiuant,
The whiche is cleped fals semblan.—Gower. Con. A. b.ii.

TRAIL, v. } Fr. Trailler; Ger. Draelen; TRAIL, n. } Dut. Treylen, to draw a ship with TRAWL. } a rope, (Killian.) Treylen is from trecken; and draggel from draw: trawl or trail differs from the latter only in the first letter.

To draw or drawl, to draw along, to produce or prolong; to protract; also to trace or track (sc.) the course or path.

A trail,—a drag; any thing drawn or dragged; a trace or tract.

Thus with treison and with treacherie. thow troiledst hem

Piers Plouhman, p. 356.

Thus hath he troiled and travailed in hus tyme.

Id. p. 357.

Out of the prease I me withdrow therefore,
And set me downe alone behind a traile,
Full of leaues, to see a great meruaile,
With greene wreaths ybounden wonderly,
The leaues were so thicke withouten faile,
That throughout no man might me espy.

Chaucer. La Belle Dame sans Mercie

They frank or keepe certaine dogs not much vnlike wolues, which they yoke together, as we do oxen & horses, to a sled

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

All in a camis light of purple silke
Woven uppon with silver, subtly wrought,
And quilted uppon sattin white as milke;
Trayled with ribbands diversly distraught,
Like as the workeman had their courses taught.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

There, on the other side, I did behold
A woman sitting sorrowfullie wailing,
Rending her yellow locks, like wryie gold
About her shoulders carelesslie downe trailing.

Id. The Ruines of Time.

And, round about, her worke she did empale
With a faire border wrought of sundrie flowres, Enwoven with an yvie-winding trayle:
A goodly worke, full fit for kingly bowres.

Id. Muiopotmos.

There bee vines that run upon trailes and frames laid over crosse-wise with foure courses of railes, in manner of a crosse dormant.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 21.

There, as the solitary mourner raves,
The ruddy morning rises o'er the waves;
Soon as it rose, his furious steeds he join'd:
The chariot flies, and Hector trails behind.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

The feather'd arrow gave a dire portent,
And latter augurs judge from this event,
Chaf'd by the speed, it fir'd; and, as it flew,
A trail of following flames ascending drew.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. v.

In the verge where Mirth him pleid.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Loke wel, that ye unto no vice assent,
Lest ye be damned for your wikke entent,
For who so doth, a traytour is certain:
And taketh kepe of that I shall you sain;
Of alle treson souveraine pestilence
Is whan a wight betrayeth innocence.
Id. The Doctoures Tale, v. 1221.

Why haue ye exempt you from our kinges laws, and visiting of our bishops more than other cristen men that liuen in this realm, if ye be not guiltie of traitorie to our realme, or trespassers to your bishops?—Id. Jack Upland.

For paramours they doe but faine,
To love truly they disdaine,
They falsen ladies traitorously.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

That false tratouresse untrew,
Was like that swallow horse of hew,
That in the Apocalips is shewed.—Id. Ib.

And so after by the lawe
He was vnto the gibet drawe,
Where he aboue all other hongeth,
As to a traitour it belongeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Indeed, said he, any woman may be as valiant as that coward, and trayterly boy, who slew my uncle trayterously, and after ran from me in the plain field.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

The whiche beyng a errant traytoure, and sechyng conuenient tyme to execute his detestable treason, by a secrete meane slewe the kynge in his chambre.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 80.

In this yere also y^e kyng of Scottes was trayterously murdered by seruantes of his owne.—Id. Ib. an. 1437.

Their confessions in the eare, of all trayterie the fountayne.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

"False traitour squire, false squire of falsest knight,
Who doth mine hand from thine avenge abstaine,
Whose lord hath done my love this foule despight, Why do I not it wreake on thee now in my might?"
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

Most woful wretch, who shining hair and eyes
Lead to Love's dungeon, traitor'd by a sight,
Most woful! for he might with greater ease
Hell's portals enter and pale Death appease.
Drummond. Thyrsis in Dispraise of Beauty.

But through high Heavens grace, which favour not
The wicked driftes of trayterous desynes
Gainst loiall princes, all this cursed plot
Ere prooffe it tooke discovered was betymes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

But what talke we of these traitorly-rascals, whose miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capitall?
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

Th' assassinating wife, the household fiend,
And, far the blackest there, the traitor-friend.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

Our sacrilegious sects their guides outgo,
And kings and kingly power would murder too,
What means that traitorous combination less,
Too plain t' evade, too shameful to confess.
Id. The Medal.

Those deplorable distractions were his judgments; the enraged multitudes were the ministers of his vengeance; and what they did wickedly, traitorously, rebelliously, was by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, wisely, righteously, and even graciously permitted.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 457.

The best of brothers, at his natal home,
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

On the 10th, heavy tidings came to England, and particularly to London, that the French had won Calais, which was the dolefullest news, and the heaviest taken that ever had happened; for, traitor-like, it was said to be sold and delivered unto them.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Mary I. an. 1557.

The citizens, therefore, of that [the Jewish] commonwealth, who apostatised, were proceeded against as traitors and rebels, guilty of no less than high treason.
Bolingbroke. Minutes of Essays, § 21.

Call to your aid, with boundless promises,
Each rebel wish, each traitor inclination,
That raises tumults in the female breast
The love of pow'r, of pleasure, and of show.
Johnson. Irene, Act iii. sc. 5.

TRALA'TION. } Lat. Tralatio, from Tras- TRALATI'TIOUS. } latum, past part. of Trans- TRALATI'TIOUSLY. } ferre, to transfer or bear over.

A transfer, a metaphor, a trope.

According to the broad tralation of his rude Rhemists.
Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. § 14.

Unless we could contrive a perfect set of new words, there is no speaking of the Deity without using our old ones in a tralatitious sense.—Stackhouse. Hist. of the Bible, b. iv. c. 1.

Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; written language is tralatitiously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced.—Holder. Elements of Speech.

TRALI'NEATE, v. Formed from Trans, and linea.

To go out of the line or direction; to deviate.

If you tralineate from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a bastard kind?
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

TRALU'CENT. } See TRANSLUCENT.
TRALU'GENCY. } Shining through; transparent.

Time, look thou too in this tralucet glass,
And thy youth past in this pure mirror see,
As the world's beauty in his infancy.
What it was then, and thou before it was.
Drayton. Ideas. To Time.

And on the top of every spray
Shall stick a pearl orient and great,
Which so the wand'ring birds shall cheat,
That some shall stoop to look for cherries,
As other for tralucet berries.
Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 2.

The principle and most gemmary affection is its tra- lucency.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

And we believe that all or most of this substance it reduced to hardness, tralucency or clearness, would have some attractive quality.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

TRA'MMEL, n. } It. Tramaglio; Fr. Tramail, TRA'MMEL, v. } trameau, a net for partridges;
a kind of drag-net or draw-net, (Cotgrave.) Minshew happily enough (as Skinner thinks) derives from the Lat. Trama, a web, (whence Fr. Tramer, It. Tramare, to weave;) from Trameare or transmeare, to pass over or across. But Cotgrave also says—Tramail is to weave, bind, fasten or insnare by threefold meshes or mails.
And Menage refers to Maille, maculæ retis, the meshes of a net. A trammel—

Any thing that involves or entangles, shackles or embarrasses. To trammel—

To involve or wrap up; to shackle, to embarrass, to hamper.

And also [commandment was given] for wrapping the same [the corpse of Hen. VIII.] in cerecloth of many folds over the fine cloth of rains and velvet, surely bound and trammel'd with cords of silk.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. Originals (A.)

Her golden lockes she roundly did uptye
In breaded tramels, that no looser heares
Did out of order stray about her daintie eares.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

— If th' assassination
Could trammel vp the consequence, and catch
With his surcease, successe.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 7.

What must every author walk in trammels, and be confined to rules of art?—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 299.

Callous, perhaps to things like these,
Would it your worship better please,
That I, more loaden than the camels,
Should crawl in philosophic trammels?
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle.

TRA'MONTANE. Fr. Tramontane; It. Tramontana; Sp. Tramontana. Applied to those who live across or beyond the mountains (trans, extra, montes) on the northern boundary of France, or Italy, or Spain. Generally—
Beyond the mountains; foreign.

No small honour (I assure you), seeing in physick the Italians account all tramontain doctors but apothecaries in comparison of themselves.

Fuller. Worthies. Hartfordshire.
Our tramontane lovers, when they begin their midnight complaint with, "My lodging upon the cold ground is," we are not to understand them in the rigour of the letter.
Tatler, No. 222.

That side of the church indeed, which faces the tramon- tane wind, is much more unsightly than the rest, by reason of the dust and smoke that are driven against it.
Addison. Italy. Milan.

— I still must envy them an age,
That favour'd such a dream; in days like these Impossible, when Virtue is so scarce,
That to suppose a scene where she presides,
Is tramontane, and stumbles all belief.
No: we are polish'd now.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

TRAMP, n. } Grose says, "A tramp,—a

TRA'MPLER. } Trampen, trampeln; Ger.
TRA'MPLING, n. } Trampen; Sw. Trampa; Dan.
Trampe, curre, incurre, calcare; to run over, tread upon. Goth. Ana-tramp, conculcaret, is found in Luc, v. 1.

To trample (dim. of tramp) is to tread upon;
to rise and fall the feet; frequently, noisily; met.
to treat, as one overthrown, cast down, prostrate,
lying under foot.

So at last whan Beryn a litill wakid were
He trampelid fast with his fete, and al to tere his ere
And his visage both, right as a wodeman.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

This blind creature, whā as wel by the noise of hearing folkes speake, as also by trampleyng of fete, he perceiued verai well that a greaute multitude of people passed by.
Udal. Luke, c. 18.

During this combate, certaine others more vndiscrete went and gathered their ananas in the Indians gardens, trampling through them without any discretion.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 320.

The trampling of whose feete the watch men of our campe hearyng.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 261.

Epaminondas the Theban, after the battel which he won before the town Leuctra, puffed up with glory in this greatness of his, determined resolutely to insult over Sparta, which now was already down the wind, and at once to tread and trample under foot the high spirit and reputation of that city.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 805.

They shall be thrown down—the trample and spurn of all the other damned.—Milton. Reformation in England, b. ii.

Far from the cows' and goats' insulting crew,
That trample down the flowers, and brush the dew.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

In this church, on the left hand of the choir, is another picture by Rubens, of Christ after his resurrection sitting on his sepulchre, trampling on the symbol of death.
Reynolds. A Journey to Flanders & Holland.

For religious enthusiasm, as we know by sad experience, places its chief glory in despising human prudence, and in violating and trampling upon human peace.
Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 6.

(The Governor of all) has interpos'd,
Not seldom, his avenging arm, to smite
Th' injurious trampler upon Nature's law,
That claims forbearance even for a brute.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

Transient,—going or passing across or away;
passing perceptibly; with perceptible speed;
speedily; flitting, flying—away in a moment;
momentary.

And with that word, in sorwe he fell adoun,
And longe time he lay forth in a trance.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,391.

Nowe vnderstande here, all were it so that the yestes of fortune, ne were not brittle ne transitorie, what is there in hem, that maie be thin in any tyme.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

But deade swonyng downe she fell,
Till afterwarde it so befell,
That she out of hir trance awoke,
With many a wofull pitous loke
Hir eie alweie amonge she caste Upon hir loue.
Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

He torneth hym into a bolle.
And gan to belowe in suche a sounne
As though the worlde shuld all go doune:
The ground he sporneth, and he traunceth
His large hornes he auaunceth.
And cast hem here and there aboute.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

At the same tyme was there a crafty knaue, an holye monke, I shulde saye, in the abbeye of Euesham, whiche laye long in a trance.—Bale. English Volaries, pt. ii.

He caught the felow by the hande, and lifted hym vp as he laye in thys trance, and furthwith the same, who before semed dead, recouered his former strength.
Udal. Marke, c. 9.

But in the mysterie of Christes person, there is no transi- tion of the deitie into the humanite, or humanite into the deitie, but onely assumption of the humanite with adunaciō of those two natures, & of two perfitt natures so differēt one person & one Christ, who is God incarnate, & man deitate, as Gregory Nazianzene saith, without mutation, cōuersion, transito, transelementation, or transubstantiation.
Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of Transubstantiation, fol. 123.

It is a naughty chaūge or alteration of thinges, whē a man falleth again from the loue of the goodes of the soule, to the desyre of the goodes of the body; from true riches to wayne and deceyuable riches: from euerlastyng commodities, to fading & transitory.—Udal. Marke, c. 10.

And whan he [kyng Robert of Scotland] felte that his ende drew nere, he sent for suche barones and lordis of his realme as he trusted best, and shewed them, how there was no remedy with hym, but he must nedis leue this transetory lyfe.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 20.

Saynt Eanswyde abbesse of Folkstane in Kent, inspyred of the deuyll, dyffyned christen marriage to be barren of all vertues, to haue but transyloryouse frutes, and to be a fylthy corruptyon of virginite.—Bale. Eng. Volaries, pt. i.

So long they sought, till they arrived were
In that same shady covert whereas lay Faire Crysogone in slombry trance whilere.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

— Twice then the trumpet sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd.—Shakes. Lear, Act v. sc. 3.

For we grow sick many times by incautiously conversing with the disease: but no man grows well by accompanying the healthy: thus indeed it is with the healthiness of the body: it hath no transient force on others, but the strength and healthiness of the minde carries with it a gracious kinde of infection: and common experience tells us, that nothing profits evil men more then the company of the good.

Hales. Remains. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

It is a rite partly moral, partly ceremonial; the first is prayer, and the other is laying on of the hands, and to an effect that is but transient and extraordinary, and of a little abode, it is not easie to be supposed that such a solemnity should be appointed.—Bp. Taylor. Of Confirmation, § 2.

The sequell of which coniunction of natures in the person of Christ, is no abolishment of naturall properties appertaining to either substance, no transitio or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another, finally, no such mutuall infusion as really causeth the same naturall operations or properties to be made common vnto both substances.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 53.

The second cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies; for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent, as well as heat: which is seen in those things that are touched with snow or cold water.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 70.

Since therefore whatsoever passes on it is for the sake of that which it represents; an image that is understood to be an image can never be made an idol; or if it can it must be by having the worship of God pass'd thorough it to God; it must be by being the analogical, the improper, the transitive, the relative (or what shall I call it) object of diuine worship.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

Vasquez, and I think he alone of all the world, owns the worst that this argument can infer, and thinks it lawful to give diuine worship relatively or transitively to a man.
Id. Ib.

For all I see is vaine and transitorie,
Ne will be held in any stedfast plight,
But in a moment loose their grace and glorie.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

For before it can fix to the observation of any one its object is gone: whereas, were there any considerable thwart in the motion; it would be a kind of stop or arrest, by the benefit of which the soul might have a glance of the fugitive transient.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 9.

A mantling chillness o'er my bosom spread,
As if that instant number'd with the dead.
Her voice now sent a fair imperfect sound,
When in a swimming trance my pangs were drown'd.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 5.

O'er his dim sight the misty vapours rise,
And a short darkness shades his swimming eyes.
Tydides follow'd to regain his lance;
While Hector rose recover'd from the trance.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Give them, as much as mortal eyes can bear,
A transient view of thy full glories there;
That they with moderate sorrow may sustain
And mollify their losses in thy gain.—Dryden. Eleonora.

While we transiently behold [heaven] in this crowd of worldly objects, [it] is placed at such a distance from us, that it looks like a thin, blue landskip, next to nothing; and hath not apparent reality enough in it to raise our desires and expectations.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort, as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration.
Decay of Christian Piety.

Thence, by a soft transition, we repair
From earthly vehicles, to these of air.
Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,
That all her vanities at once are dead.
Pope. Rape of the Lock, c. 1.

Words are often used promiscuously, and εὐλογεῖν is taken transitively in this very case by the apostle.
Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 86.

Slave Antonio, take him into custody; and dost thou hear, boy, be sure to secure the little transitory box of jewels.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iv. sc. 1.

Thus considering the lubricity and transitoriness of that prosperity, which foolish and wicked men enjoyed, did serve to cure that envious distemper which began to effect the good man's heart [David's].—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

Proposition vi. That heedful observation may satisfy a man of the vanity of the world, and the transitoriness of external, and especially, sinful enjoyments.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 792.

Impatient of restraint, the active mind,
No more by servile Prejudice confin'd,
Leaps from her seat, as waken'd from a trance,
And darts through nature at a single glance.
Churchill. Night.

Here, from time and transience won,
Beauty has her charms resign'd;
Heav'n already is begun,
Opening in an humble mind.—Brooke. An Anthem.

They examine and judge for themselves in the common affairs of life sometimes, and not always even in these; but the greatest and the noblest objects of the human mind are very transiently, at best, the object of theirs.
Bolingbroke. Ess. 4. Authority on Matters of Religion.

As the day of observation now approached, I determined in consequence of some hints which had been given me by Lord Morton, to send out two parties to observe the transit from other situations; hoping, that if we should fail at Otaheite, they might have better success.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 13.

On Thursday the 1st of June [1769.] the Saturday following being the day of the transit, I dispatched Mr. Gore in the long boat to Imas.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 15.

Indeed this sudden transition from warm, mild weather, to extreme cold and wet, made every man in the ship feel its effects.—Id. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage, and tyrant's angry steel;
Thou transitory flow'r, alike undone
By proud contempt, or favour's fostering sun;
Still may thy blooms the changeable clime endure!
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

TRA'NGRAM. The meaning of the word must be inferred from the quotation.

J. Bull. As we had almost finished our concern, we were accosted by some of Lord Strutt's servants: "Hey day!
What's here? What a devil's the meaning of all these tran- grams and gimcracks, gentlemen? What in the name of wonder are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds?"
Swift. The History of John Bull, pt. ii. c. 6.

TRA'NNEL. Perhaps a trundle; a turning or rounding-pin.

With a small trannel of iron, or a large nail grounded to a sharp point, they mark the brick.—Moxon. Mech. Ex.

TRA'NQUILLIZE, v. } quillare; Sp. Tranquilo, tranquilizar; Lat. Tranquillus. Applied peculiarly to the sea (Vossius), as serene to the sky. And thus (Cotgrave)—

"Calm, untroubled, without surges, quiet, still, hush't, peaceable, peaceful."

Than, if it so bee that thou art mightie ouer thy self, that is to saine, by tranquillitie of thy soule, than haste thou thyng in thy power, that thou noldest neuer lesen.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

And whenne Marius had thus subdued his enemyes, he attendyd and sette hys mynde to the cōmon wele of this lande and subgettes, and contynued the resydue of his lyfe in great tranquillite and reste.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 57.

And therefore is this tranquillite of the sea for that little tyme, as a truce taking in the winter, called the halcyons dayes.—Joye. Exposition of Daniel, Ep. Ded.

— Oh now, for euer
Farewell the tranquill minde; farewell content;
Farewell the plumed troopes, and the bigge warres,
That makes ambition vertue.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

— He dare never sleepe, but that one eye
Still ope he keepest for that occasion;
Ne ever rests he in tranquillity,
The roling billowes beat his bowre so boystroously.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

Instead of having our labours and anxieties relieved by approaching a warmer climate and more tranquil seas, we were to steer again to the southward, and were again to combat those western blasts, which had so often terrified us.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 8.

On the 13th of April [1741.] we were but a degree in latitude to the southward of the west entrance of the streights of Magellan; so that we fully expected, in a very few days, to have experienced the celebrated tranquillity of the Pacific ocean.—Id. Ib.

It has been already observed, that the end of the action of the Odyssey is the re-establishment of Ulysses in full peace and tranquillity.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, Notes.

And still with her sweet Innocence we find,
And tender Peace, and joys without a name,
That, while they ravish, tranquillize the mind:
Nature and Art, at once, delight and use combin'd.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

Expressive passion, in each sound convey'd,
Shall all its joy disclose, and all its smart;
Reason to modest tenderness persuade,
Smooth ev'ry thought, and tranquillize the heart.
Blacklock. Elegy to a Lady.

They [moral virtues, and the Christian graces,] certainly possess a power of tranquillizing the spirits under bodily sufferings, and, therefore, of becoming conducive to cure;
but, at all events, they contribute more than any thing else to give patience under sufferings, because they inspire the cheerfulness of hope.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 21.

Unvanquish'd, easier to transact with mee
That thou shouldst hope, imperious, and with threat,
To chase me hence. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Which pretences I am content to let alone, if they upon this account will but transact the question wholly by scripture and common sense.

Bp. Taylor. On the Real Presence, § 12.

And that for their parts, they had appointed six persons of their own body to transact and conclude with the lords.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1540.

In our transactions with men, when we have an honest man's word for a bargain, we think it safe: but, when his hand and seal, infallible: but, when we have part in hand already, the contract is past.—Bp. Hall. Ser. 2 Pet. i. 10.

This said, they all with one consent
Agreed to draw up th' instrument,
And for the general satisfaction
To print it in the next transaction.

Butler. The Elephant in the Moon.

God, who knows and governs all things, is the sovereign director and transactor in matters that so come to pass, (the fulfilling of prophecies.)—Derham. Christo-Theology, p. 21.

In a country fully stocked in proportion to all the business it had to transact, as great a quantity of stock would be employed in every particular branch as the nature and extent of the trade would admit.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 9.

This I was sorry for, as I wanted to make her a present, in return for the part she had taken in all our transactions, private as well as public.—Cock. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 2.

poets, very incarnated, transanimated devils.

Dean King, Ser. 5. Nov. 1608.

I forbear to speake of the erroneous opinions of these Jewish masters concerning that Pythagorean transanimation or passage of the soule from one body to another (a point which the Jewes had learned from them, Matth. xvi. 14.)

Bp. Hall. Pharisaism & Christianitie.

There are at this day great sects among the Indians of the east, that retain this doctrine of transanimation, believing that the souls of some descend again into humane bodies; but that others pass into the bodies of beasts: so did some of the ancient Pythagoreans, who taught, that good men returned to their former blessed and happy life; but that the wicked in their first transmigrating chang'd their sex; in the second they descended into beasts: yea, some supposed them at last to go into trees and other vegetables.

Glanvill, Ess. 2.

excel, to exceed; to climb or rise to great height or eminence; to be or become eminent, super-eminent, highly elevated, supreme.

The shore let her transcend, the promont to descry,
And view about the point th' unnumber'd fowl that fly.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. i.

— But if within ten days,
My precepts and examples, not drawn from Worm-eaten presidents of the Roman wars
But from mine own, I make them not transcend
All that e'er yet bore armes, let it be said, Protaldye brags.—Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret.

We of th' adult'rate mixture not complain,
But thence more characters of virtue gain;
More pregnant patterns of transcendent worth,
Than barren and insipid fruit brings forth.

Carew. To William D'Avenant.

Old Laf. In a most weak—

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 3.

Nature shews me the gastliness of death: faith shews me
the transcendency of heavenly glory.

Bp. Hall. Select Thoughts, § 83.

Even in meaner matters, we cannot attain to the knowledge of things by their causes, but are glad to take up with this secondary information; how much more in the highest of all causes, in whom there is nothing but transcendency and infiniteness!—Bp. Hall. Remedy of Prophanesne.

To be impenetrable, discernible and unactive, is the nature of all body and matter, as such; and the properties of a spirit are the direct contrary, to be penetrable, indiscernible, and self-motive; yea, so different they are in all things, that they seem to have nothing but being, and the transcendental attributes of that, in common.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

When a man hath this grace habitually, although it may be so that he cannot produce the proper specifick habit opposite to his sin for which he specially repents, yet his supreme habit does contain in it the specifick habit virtually and transcendently.—Bp. Taylor. Polem. Disc. p. 685.

Admiror, stupeo: why are you enraged against me, if I cannot attain the measure of your transcendence, but confesse my disability and imperfection?

Mountagu. Appeale to Caesar, c. 8.

— Many a shade hill,
And many an echoing valley; many a field
Pleasant, and wishfull, did his passage yield
Their safe transcension.

Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Hermes.

This said; shee reacht heauen, where ayres euer flowe;
And so (O goddess) euer honor'd be
In thy so odorous Cyprian emperie;
My muse, affecting first, thy fame to raise;
Shall make transcension now, to others praise.

Id. A Hymne to Venus.

To sing thy praise, would heaven my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song;
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus, crown'd with never fading bays.

Dryden. Virgil, Past. 4.

Distinguish'd excellence the goddess proves;
Exults Latona, as the virgin moves.
With equal grace Nausicaa trod the plain,
And shone transcendent o'er the beauteous train.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

This is that pure, simple, absolute, transcendental necessity, which the later schoolmen and metaphysicians speak of.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 433.

The right ordering of these transcendentals is a business of no small difficulty: because there is so little assistance or help to be had for it in the common systems.

Wilkins. Real Character, pt. ii. c. 1.

It is not possible, but that such a life as this, must needs be a fountain of inexpressible joy to him that leads it, and fill the soul with transcendently greater content than any thing upon earth can possibly do.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Then let the firmament thy wonder raise;
'Twill raise thy wonder, but transcend thy praise.

Young. The Last Day, b. i.

It was for jargon like this that a famous schoolman got the name of the transcendent doctor.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. App.

There is scarcely any sentiment in which, amidst the innumerable varieties of inclination that nature or accident have scattered in the world, we find great numbers con-curring, than in the wish for riches; a wish indeed so prevalent, that it may be considered as universal and transcendental.—Rambler, No. 131.

— Pregnant womb of ills!

That toads and serpents of most deadly kind,
Compar'd to thee, are harmless.—Blair. The Grave.

TRANS-CO'ULATE. Fr. Trans-couler; to

The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air.—Harvey.

TRANS-CORPORATE,—seems to be intended by Brown to denote transmigrating from body to body.

The stoicks who thought the souls of wise men had their habitation about the moon, might make slight account of subterraneous deposition; whereas the Pythagorians and transcorporating philosophers who were to be often buried, held great care of their enterrment.

Brown. Urne Burial, c. 4.

from one paper, &c. to another.

To write from something already written or printed; to copy from another.

He procured Henry Jackson, then of Corpus Christi College, to transcribe for him all Mr. Hooker's remaining written papers, many of which were imperfect.

Dr. King. Letter to Mr. Walton.

A great part of these annals were sent over to him some years before, whilst they lay yet shadowed in their first lineaments, and were scarce well begun, disfigured with blurs and dashes, full of chinks and patches here and there cobbled together, as they slipped from my hasty pen, and very ill handled by the transcriber.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, To the Reader.

Episcopus replied, that he had none handsomely written, if the synod would have patience, he would cause a fair transcript to be drawn for them.

Hales. Letter from the Synod of Dort, Dec. 1618.

I do conceive, that from Dr. Spencer's and no other copy, there have been divers transcripts.—Walton. Life of Hooker.

And by their transcription, they fell into the hands of others, that have preserved them from being lost, as too many of his other matchless writings have been.—Id. Ib.

That being done all auditors were removed, and it was inquired what order the synod thought fittest to be taken with the remonstrants huge volume, the transcription whereof was impossible.

Dr. Balcanqual. Letter from the Synod of Dort, Feb. 1619.

Not a few transcriptively, subscribing their names unto they have written.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 6.

I have sometimes used Madam Dacier as she has done others, in transcribing some of her remarks without particularizing them.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, Notes.

Besides that if we can distinguish in the present case, as perhaps a good critic may, the particularities of the author from those of his transcribers.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 316.

The business of transcribing the remains of Grecian and Roman literature, became an useful, an innocent, and pleasing employ to many of those who, in the dark ages, would else have pined in the listless languor of monastic retirement.—Knox. Ess. No. 135.

The addition of a single letter (and that a letter which transcribers have been very apt to omit) to the word that now occurs in the Hebrew, will give it that plural form which the Seventy have expressed.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

Gaze on creation's model in thy breast
Unveil'd, nor wonder at the transcript more?

Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

Exempt from the avocations of civil life, incapable of lit-rary exertions from the want of books and opportunities of improvement, they devoted the frequent intervals of religious duty to the transcription of authors whom they often little understood.—Knox. Ess. No. 135.

Thirdly, he [Aristotle] has suffered vastly from the tran- scribblers, as all authors of great brevity necessarily must.
Gray. To Dr. Wharton, Dec. 1746.

TRANS-CUR, v. } It. Trascorre; Lat. Trans- TRANSCURSION. } curre, to run over or

To run over; to move or pass cursorily over.

For astonishment, it is caused by the fixing of the minde ate and transcurre, as it useth.—Bacon. Nat. Historie, § 720.

Which cohesion may consist in an immediate union of these parts, and transverse penetration and transcursion of secondary substance through this whole sphere of life which we call a spirit.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 6.

TRANS-DIALECT, v. } A word invented
TRANSDIALECTING, n. } by Warburton,—
To translate from one dialect into another.

Hence, doubtless, trans-dialecting was no rare practice.
For, besides this instance of Ocellus Lucanus, we have another, in the poems going under the name of Orpheus:
which, Iamblichus says, were written in the Doric dialect.
But now the fragments of these poems, left us by those who did not write in Doric, are in the common dialect. It is plain then they have been trans-dialected.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 3.

TRANS-ELEMENT, v. } A word invented
TRANSELEMENTATE, v. } in the controver-TRANSELEMENTATION. } sies of the church,
—(trans, and element.)

See the last quotation from Bp. Taylor.

Notwithstanding, in this place wee alleged his woordes to good purpose. For, as he saith, wee are transselemented, or trans-natured, and changed into Christe, even so, and none otherwise, wee saie, the breade is transelemented, or chaged into Christes body.

Jewell. A Replie unto M. Hardinge, p. 238.

But in the mysterie of Christes person, there is no trasition of the Deitie into the humanite, or humanite into the Deitie, but onely assumption of the humanite with adunaciõ of those two natures, & of two perfit natures so differet, one person & one Christ, who is God incarnate, & man deitate, as Gregory Nazianzene saith, without mutation, cōversion, transitiō, transelementation, or transubstantiation.

Bp. Gardner. Explic. Of Transubstantiation, fol. 123.

But to the same purpose is that also which Chedzy said in his disputation at Oxford; "In what manner Christ is there, whether with the bread transelemented or transubstantiated the scripture in open words, tells not."

Bp. Taylor. Disuasive from Popery, b. ii. pt. ii. § 3.

He that eateth me, liveth by me, whilst he is in a certain manner mingled with me, is transelementated or changed into me.—Id. Of the Real Presence, § 12.

The name of transelementation, which Theophylact did use, seems to approach nearer to signify the propriety of this mystery, because it signifies a change even of the first elements; yet that word is harder, and not sufficiently accommodate: for it may signify the resolution of one element into another, or the resolution of a mixt body into the elements.—Id. Ib.

TRANSEPT. That part of a church which is carried out on each side perpendicularly to the length.

After K. Ch. II. was restored, he [Tho. Triplet] was made preb. of Westminster, and of Fenton in the church of York; and dying 18 of Jul. 1670, aged 70 years, his body was buried in the south transept or large south isle joyning to the choir of St. Peters church in Westminster.

Wood. Past. Oxon. vol. ii.

TRANS-EXION. } Words used by Sir T. TRANSFEMINATE, v. } Brown, and which the quotation from him sufficiently explains.

But surely it much impeacheth this itera d transection of hares, if that be true which Cardan and other physitiāns affirm, that transmutation of sex is only so in opinion; and that these transfeminated persons were really men at first; although succeeding years produced the manifesto or evidence of their virilities.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

TRANSFER, v. } Fr. Transférer; It. Tras-
TRANSFER, n. } ferire; Sp. Transferir; Lat.
TRANSFERABLE. } Transferre, (trans, and ferre,) to bear or carry across.

To bear or carry over, (from the possession of one to another, from one account to another;) to convey, to transport, to transmit.

He had oppressed the true religion and worshipping of God with pilgrimages to dead stockes and stones of mannes handie worke, with transferring the honoure which was due to God alone, vnto saintes and to feined miracles, with other kindes of idolatry innumerable.

Udal. Pref. to K. Edward VI.

Are brutall things, transferred so to men?
Or men become more sauage than the beast?

Gascoigne. To such as found fault with Gascoigne's Posies.

The war being now transferred into Munster, the series both of matters and times calleth me thither also.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1601.

I first transferr'd to Rome Sicilian strains:
Nor blush'd the Doric muse to dwell on Mantuan plains.

Dryden. Virgil, Past. 6.

Amsterdam—where industry had been for so many years subsisted and circulated by transfers on paper.

Berkeley. Querist, § 250.

He would not, however, part with it till he had the cloth in his possession, and as there could be no transfer of property, if with equal caution I had insisted upon the same condition, I ordered the cloth to be handed down to him.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

We have taken notice in the chapter on judgement of the transferrable nature of assent, and how it passes from the premisses to the conclusion.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 18.

TRANS-FIGURE, v. } Fr. Transfigurer;
TRANSFIGURATION. } It. Trasfigurare; Sp. Transfigurar; Lat. Transfigurare, (trans, and figura.) See FIGURE.

To change or alter, from one figure, form, or shape, into another; to transform; to trans-shape.

And aftir sixe dayes Jhesus took Petre & James and Jon and ledde hem by hemself aloone into an high hil, and he was transfigurid before hem.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

And after. vi. dayes Jhesus toke Peter, James & John, and led theym vp into an hye mountayne out of the waye alone, and he was transfigured before them.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

— "Venus, if it be your will
You in this garden thus to transfigure,
Before me sorrowful wretched creature,
Out of this prison helpe that we may scape."

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1106.

And these three also had he longe erste vouchsaued to admitte bothe to be priuy to his glorious transfiguracion, and also presently to see it.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1353.

All sodainely she saw transfigured

Her linnen stole to robe of scarlet red,
And moone-like mitre to a crowne of gold.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

For some attribute immortalitie to the soule: others devise a certaine transfiguration thereof.

Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 55.

Moses, appeared visibly to our Saviour Christ and his disciples, upon the mount, and therefore (since piety will not permit us to think this a meer prestigious thing) in real bodies; which bodies also, seem to have been, luciform or lucid, like to our Saviour's then transfigured body.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 805.

That condition of life [marriage] will have no place; but will be succeeded by an angelical state, where our friendships, as well as our persons, will be transfigured, and made incomparably more perfect, than they can be here below.

Boyle. Workes, vol. v. p. 277.

We are told by St. Paul, that, in the future state, our vile bodies shall be transformed into the "likeness of his glorious body," and how glorious it is in heaven, we may guess by what it was at his transfiguration here on earth, during which the scripture relates, "that his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light."—Id. Ib. p. 557.

TRANS-FIX, v. } It. Trafiggere; Lat. Trans- TRANSFIXION. } fixum, past part. of trans- figere, (trans, and figere, to fasten or fix, qv.)

To fix through, by piercing through; to pierce through, to transpierce; to stab through.

At that wide orifice her trembling hart
Was drawne forth, and in silver basin layd,
Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart,
And in her blood yet steeming fresh embayd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Among the Jews it was lawful for a private person to transfix his brother or his father, if either of them attempted him to idolatry; and in a cause of God they might do public justice by a private hand.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

Six several times do we find that Christ shed blood; in his circumcision, in his agonie, in his crowning, in his scourging, in his affliction; in his transfixion.

Bp. Hall. Ser. Gal. ii. 20.

Then, as an eagle gripes the trembling game,
The wretch yet hissing with her father's flame,
She strongly seiz'd, and, with a burning wound,
Transfix'd and naked, on a rock she bound.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. i.

The butcher-bird transfixes its prey upon the spike of a thorn, whilst it picks its bones.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

TRANS-FORM. } Fr. Transformer; It. Tras-
TRANSFORMATION. } formare; Sp. Transformar;
Lat. Transformare, (trans, and formare, to form or frame.)

To change or alter from one form or frame, figure or shape, into another; to transfigure, to trans-shape.

And alle we that with open face seen the glorie of the Lord ben transfourmyd into the same ymage fro clerenesse into clerenesse as of the Spyryt of the Lord.

Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 3.

Thilke ordinaunce moueth the heauen and the sterres, and attempteth the elements together among hem self, and transformethe hem by enterchaungeable mutacion.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Where that the mighty gods lawe,

Sir, we fynde in olde writyng, that aüciently such as were called goddes and goddesses, at their pleasure wolde chaunge and transforme men into beestes and into foules.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 27.

Lyke as in transformacions and naturall chaungynges of thynges, there is a certayne meane, whiche hathe some affinitie wyth both the extremes, to thintente that thynges of muche contrarietie maye easelye bee transformed, and turned one into an other.—Udal. Marke, c. 1.

He by his active nimbleness of hand
Into a serpent would transform a wand,
As those Egyptions, which by magic thought
Far beyond Moses wonders to have wrought.

Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

Thus it must be in our transformation, onwards; the Spirit of God doth thus alter us through grace, whiles we are yet, for essence, the same.

Bp. Hall. The Estate of a Christian.

White plumes adorn thy crest, and wave above,
Expressive of thy sire, transform'd by love,
While for his Phaeton his sorrows flow,
And soft harmonious strains beguile his woe.

Pitt. Virgil. Aeneid, b. x.

It [example] comes in by the eyes and ears, and sips insensibly into the heart, and so into the outward practice, by a kind of secret charm transforming men's minds and manners into his own likeness.

Waterland. Workes, vol. viii. p. 418.

They are proper to the intellect of man, as an image of the Deity; they are the certain symptoms of the Christian's communion with his God, and an earnest of his future transformation into the perfect likeness of his Lord.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 35.

TRANS-FRETATION. Lat. Transfretatio, passage across a strait (trans fretum).

She had a rough passage in her transfretation to Dover Castle.—Howell, b. i. Let. 22.

There goes a pleasant tale of a certain Sr. Politick, that in the last great plague projected, how by a vessel freight with peel'd onions which should passe along the Thames by the city, when the wind sate in a favourable quarter,—to attract the pollution of the aer, and sail away with the infection to the sea: transportation of diseases we sometimes read of amongst the magneticall, or rather magical cures; but never before of this way of transfretation.

Evelyn. Fumifugium, pt. iii.

TRANSFUSE, v. } Sp. Transfusion; Lat.
TRANSFUSION. } Transfundere, to pour over or across (trans, and fund-ere, to pour.) See CONFOUND, CONFUSE, &c.

To pour over (sc.) from one vessel to another; to pour or spread over.

"For your sweet beauty daintily transfus'd
With due proportion throughout ev'ry part,
What is it but a dance, where Love hath us'd
His finer cunning, and more curious art."

Davies. On Dancing.

The Præses first spake many things learnedly of the necessity of catechizing, that it was the basis and ground of religion, and the sole way of transfusing the principles of Christianity into men.

Hales. Letter from the Synod at Dort, Nov. 1618.

It is with languages as 'tis with liquors, which by transfusion use to take wind from one vessel to an other.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 47.

The greatest part of our diseases arise either from the scarcity, or malignant temper and corruption of our blood; in which cases transfusion is an obvious remedy; and in the way of this operation, the peccant blood may be drawn out, without the danger of too much enfeebling nature, which is the grand inconvenience of meer phlebotomies.

Glanvill. Ess. 3.

Its [gratitude] best instrument therefore is speech, that most natural, proper, and easie mean of conversation, of signifying our conceptions, of conveying, and as it were transfunding our thoughts and our passions into each other.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

He [Ennius] himself believed, according to the Pythagorean opinion, that the soul of Homer was transfused into him.—Dryden. Ded. to Juvenal.

It is enough if he [the translator] choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense. I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts methinks he breaks it. By this means the spirit of an author may be transfused and yet not lost.

Id. Preface to Ovid's Epistles.

The virtue of one generation was transfused, by the magick of example, into several: and a spirit of heroism was maintained through many ages of that common-wealth.

Bolingbroke. On the Study of History, Let. 2.

The experiment of transfusion proves, that the blood of one animal will serve for another.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 25.

It is a common remark, that the spirit of an author, like that of some essences, evaporates by transfusion.

By fourme of the kynges lawys they were founde culpable in certayne artycles, towchynge transgressyon agayne the kyng. — Fabyan. Chronicle, an. 1257.

Humane laws oblige only that they be not despis'd, that is, that they be not transgressed without a reasonable cause: but the laws of God must be obeyed in all cases; and there is no cause to break them, and there can be no necessity upon us to commit sin.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

Sin is a transgression of some law, and this law must be made by a superior, and there is no superior but who depends on God, and therefore his law is its measure.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

For though permitted unto his proper principles, Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan: and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

It is certain therefore, he intended thou shouldst speedily repent; and since he hath by words and deeds declar'd this to be his purpose, he that obeys not, is in this very delay, properly and specifically, a transgressor.

Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 5. § 2.

That lawless wretch, that man of brutal strength, Deaf to Heaven's voice, the social rite transgress'd; And for the beauteous mares destroy'd his guest.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

One may add that the use of the grand style on little subjects is not only ludicrous, but a sort of transgression against the rules of proportion and mechanics: it is using a vast force to lift a feather. — Id. Ib. Post.

But then these children, in that very wilderness, the scene of their father's crime and calamity, fell into the same transgressions. — Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 6.

TRANS-VLIENCY. Lat. Transiliens, pres. part. of transilire, to leap across.

A leap, a spring across.

By an unadvised transiliency leaping from the effect to its remotest cause, we observe not the connexion through the interposal of more immediate casualties; which yet at last bring the extremes together without a miracle.

I have here don my feithfull besinesse After the legende in translation Right of thy glorious lif and passion.

Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15, 428.

I rede all other men beware, And that thei loke well alidgate, That none his owne estate translate Of holy churche in no degree By fraude ne subtilitee. — Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

So shall he be the lesse pained, if he se thee, as it were, take paine with him; and in a manner translate & shift part of his sickness vnto thy selfe.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 4.

The lorde wolde glorifye his own name in that all men shuld se the kyngdom of Babylon by the diuine iugement to be subuerted, & himself to be the changer and translator of kyngedoms and tymes.

Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 5.

It had been in some of the former sessions determined that there should be chosen six diuines for the translation of the Bible, three for the Old Testament, and three for the New with the Apocrypha.

Hales. Letter from the Synod of Dort, Nov. 1618.

VOL. II.

I have frequently doubted whether it be a pure indigene or translatitious. — Evelyn, b. i. c. 4. § 8.

Again, whereas your great Achilles, Cardinal Perron in French, as also his noble translatress, misled by him, in English hath made bold with the Latine tongue.

Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, pt. i. c. 6. § 29.

From thence our generous emulation came, We undertook, and we perform'd the same. But now, we show the world a nobler way, And in translated verse do more than they.

Roscommon. An Essay on Translated Verse.

This is to translate, and not to define, when we change two words of the same signification one for another; which, when one is better understood than the other, may serve to discover what idea the unknown stands for, but is very far from a definition. — Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4.

Then Pope and Dryden brought in triumph home The pride of Greece, and ornament of Rome; To the great task each bold translator came, With Virgil's judgment, and with Homer's flame.

Pitt. To Mr. Pope.

The translatory is a lie that transfers the merits of a man's good action to another more deserving. — Arbuthnot.

There wanders an opinion among the readers of poetry, that one of these satires is an exercise of the school. Dryden says, that he once translated it at school; but not that he preserved or published the juvenile performance.

Johnson. Life of Dryden.

Not long afterwards he undertook the most arduous work of its kind, a translation of Virgil. . . . "He produced, (says Pope,) the most noble and spirited translation that I know in any language." — Id. Ib.

TRANS-LAVA'TION. A laving or lading from one (vessel) to another.

This translavation ought so long to be continued out of one vessel into another, untill such time as it have done casting any residence downward; for the sediment that resteth in the bottome is the best.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 18.

TRANS-LOCA'TION. A placing (location) over or across (trans).

A change or changing from one place to another.

The most notable of these offices that can be assigned to the spirit of nature, and that suitably to his name, is the translocation of the souls of beasts into such matter as is most fitting for them.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 13.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 1.

And, whilst the murmuring woods even shudder'd as with fear, Preach'd to the beardless youth the soul's immortal state; The other bodies still how it should transmigrate, That to contempt of death them strongly might excite.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

Which makes me think of what the Ethnics told Th' opinion, the Pythagorists up-hold, That the immortal soul doth transmigrate.

Id. To Mr. William Brown.

Nay he [Moses] with his successor Joshua is copious in the Israelites' entering, conquering, and expelling the Gergesites, Jebusites, and the rest out of the holy land: yet no witness have they of their transmigration, and peopling of Afric. — Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 1. Selden. Illust.

'Tis notoriously known, that Pythagoras and his sectators held the doctrine of transmigration, which supposes pre-existence, and both, that the soul is a substance, which can come, and be join'd to another thing. — Glanvill. Ess. 2.

(This was the doctrine of Pythagoras himself) that the souls of animals are immortal, did preexist, and do transmigrate. — Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 42.

Plutarch himself there defends the mortality of demons, but this only as to their corporeal part, that they die to their present bodies, and transmigrate into others, their souls in the mean time remaining immortal and incorruptible. — Id. Ib. p. 424.

Those philosophers allow of transmigration, and are of opinion that the souls of men may, for their miscarriages, be detruded into the bodies of beasts, as fit habitations, with organs suited to the satisfaction of their brutal inclinations.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

Whenever we find a people begin to revive in literature, it was owing to one of these causes; either to some transmigrators from those parts coming and settling among them, or else to their going thither for instruction.

Ellis. Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 122.

Even this remnant of the nation did not continue long entire. Another great transmigration followed; and the Jews, that settled under the protection of the Ptolemies, forgot their language in Egypt, as the forefathers of these Jews had forgot theirs in Chaldea.

Bolingbroke. Of the Study of History, Let. 3.

As to the souls of the lower sort of people, they undergo a sort of transmigration; or, as they say, are eat by a bird called coata, which walks upon their graves for that purpose. — Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 11.

TRANS-MIT, v. } Fr. Trans-mettre; It. Trasmettere; Sp. Trans-mittir; Lat. Transmittere; (trans, and mittere,) to send over or across. See COM-MIT, EMIT, &c.

To send over or across; to send, to pass over (to another).

The divers nourishment transmitting many and sundry qualities into the masse and bulke of the body, distributeth unto every part that which is meet and fit for it.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 576.

The world (quoth he) [Plato] receive all good things from the first author who created it; but what evil thing soever there is, what wickedness, what injustice, the same it self hath from the exterior habitude, which was before, and the same it doth transmit, and give to the creatures beneath.
Id. Ib. p. 846.

In the experiment of transmission of the sea-water into the pits, the water riseth; but in the experiment of transmission of the water through the vessels, it falleth.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 2.

Give us leave to enjoy the government and benefit of laws under which we were born; and which we desire to transmit to our posterity.
Dryden. The Medal. Epist. to the Whigs.

Renown'd in thy records shall Ca'ndish stand,
Asserting legal power, and just command:
To the great house thy favour shall be shown,
The father's star transmissive to the son.
Prior. Carmen Seculare.

Whene'er his influence Jove vouchsafes to shower
To bless the natal, and the nuptial hour;
From the great sire transmissive to the race,
The boon devolving gives distinguish'd grace.

Worcester. Century of Inventions, § 73.

Besides the transmittal to England of two thirds of the revenues of Ireland, they make our country a receptacle for their supernumerary pretenders to offices.—Swift.

He lives to build, not boast, a generous race:
No tenth transmitter of a foolish face.
Savage. The Bastard.

In the other he entered the names of the ship and the commander, himself, in order to transmit them to the governor and council of the Indies.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 10.

Charity, or tenderness for the poor, which is now justly considered, by a great part of mankind, as inseparable from piety, and in which almost all the goodness of the present age consists, is, I think, known only to those who enjoy, either immediately or by transmission, the light of revelation.—Idler, No. 4.

When alphabetical writing made the conveyance of opinions, and the transmission of events, more easy and certain, literature did not flourish in more than one country at once, or distant nations had little commerce with each other.—Id. No. 68.

TRANS-MOVE, v. To move from one thing to another; to transform.

Next Saturne was, (but who would ever weene
That sullein Saturne ever weend to love?
Yet love is sullein, and Saturnlike seene,
As he did for Erigone it prove.)
That to a centaure did himselfe transmove.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

TRANS-MUTE, v. } Fr. Transmuer, (to transmew, qv.); It. Trasmutare; Sp. Transmutar; Lat. Transmutare.

To change from one thing to another, from one sort or kind to another; to change by transfer, or transposition, or transmission.

This wretched worldes transmutation,
As wele and wo, now poor, and now honour,
Without order or due discretion,
Gouerned is by Fortunes errour.
Chaucer. A Ballade of the Village without painting.

Thā the emperour hauyng compassion of the forenamyd Barnarde, for so moche as he was the sone of Pepyn, last kyng of Italy, & his nere kynnesman, transmutyd the sentence of deth vnto perpetuyte of pryson, & losynge of his syght.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 159.

And oft eke him, that doth the heauens gide,
Hath loue transformed for shapen for him to base:
Transmutyd thus, sometime a swan is he,
Leda to coy; and eft Europe to please.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Power of Loue, &c.

And pope Bonyface, who lost moche by that transmutation, sente a legate into Almaygne to preche amonge them, to cause them to retourne agayne to his parte.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 429.

Neither is that supposition true as touching corruption; for every thing that perisheth is not transmuted into the contrary.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 817.

This worke of the transmutation of plants, one into another, is inter maglia naturæ: for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible: and certainly it is a thing of difficultie, and requireth deep search into nature.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 525.

The other is, when the conversion is into a body meerly new, and which was not before; as if silver should be turned to gold; or iron to copper: and this conversion is better called for distinction sake transmutation.—Id. Ib. § 838.

Some learned modern naturalists have conjectured at the easy transmutableness of water by what happens in gardens and orchards, where the same showers or rain, after a long drought, makes a great number of differing plants to flourish.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 69.

The Aristotelians, who believe water and air to be reciprocally transmutable, do thereby fancy an affinity between them, that I am not yet convinced of.—Id. Ib. p. 342.

You say, that in that perpetual course of transmutation which the matter of humane bodies runs, it may happen, and sometimes doubtless it doth, that the same particles at several times are incorporated into several bodies.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Pour forth thy fervours for a healthful mind,
Obedient passions, and a will resign'd;
For love, which scarce collective man can fill;
For patience, sov'reign o'er transmuted ill;
For faith, that, panting for a happier seat,
Counts death kind Nature's signal of retreat.
Johnson. The Vanity of Human Wishes.

The principal operations of nature are, not the absolute annihilation and new creation of what we call material substances, but the temporary extinction and reproduction, or, rather in one word, the transmutation of forms.
Jones. Hymn to Durga, Argum.

TRANS-NATURE, v. To transfer the nature.

Notwithstandinge, in this place wee alleged his woordes to good purpose. For, as he sayth, wee are transelemented, or transnatured, and changed into Christe, euen so, and none otherwise, wee saie, The breade is transelemented, or chaged into Christes body.
Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 238.

TRANSOM. A cross or transverse beam or bar.

Over these vessels, there be certaine barrs [of yron] or transoms overthwart, lying fast that they cannot stirre, at which there hang downe cords or ropes with stones at the end.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 12.

But onlie franke posts, raisins, beames, pricke-posts, groundsels, summer (or dormants) transoms, and such principals.—Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 12.

The sea now broke most surprizingly all round us, and a large tumbling swell threatened to poop us; by which the long-boat at this time moored a-stern, was on a sudden canted so high, that it broke the transom of the commodore's gallery, whose cabin was on the quarter-deck, and would doubtless have risen as high as the trafterel, had it not been for the stroke, which stove the boat all to pieces.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 2.

The 27th and 28th were spent in refitting the ship, fixing a transom for the tiller, getting stones on board.
Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 6.

TRANS-PARENT. } Fr. Transparent; It. Trasparente; Sp. Transparente; Lat. of the Lower Ages, Transparens, pres. part. of transparere, to appear through, to be seen through.

Seeming through, shewing, shining through; that may be seen through; pellucid, diaphanous. Stirling uses the v. Transpare, (It. Trasparere.)

Oft haue I wish't, whil'st in this state I was,
That th' alabaster bulwarke might transparent,
And that the pillars rarer then they are,
Might whiles permit some hapning rayes to passe.
Stirling. Aurora, s. 73.

She by abstracting of her beautie's rayes,
With griefe congeal'd the source from whence they flow:
But through the yce of that vnjust disdaine,
Yet still *transpare*s her picture and my paine.
Id. Ib. s. 99.

'Mongst which clear amber jellied seem'd to be,
Through whose transparence you might easily see
The beds of pearl whereon the gum did sleep, Cockles, broad scallops, and their kind that keep
The precious seed which of the waters come.
Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

With amber bracelets cut like bees,
Whose strange transparence who sees,
With silk small as the spider's twist
Doubled so oft about thy wrist,
Would surely think alive they were,
From lilies gathering honey there.
Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 2.

O father Jupiter, doe thou the sonnes of Greece release
Of this felt darknesse; grace this day with fit transparencies,
And give the eyes thou giv'st, their use, destroy us in the light,
And worke thy will with us, since needs thou wilt against us fight.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Which, though (with all the skill thou can'st devise)
Thou overlay'st with fairest colouring;
Yet th' under-work, transparent, shows too plain.
"Where open acts accuse, th' excuse is vain."
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Now in this grace it is fit that the wisdom and severity of the man should hold forth a pure taper, that his wife may, by seeing the beauties and transparence of that chrystal, dress her mind and her body by the light of so pure reflexions.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 18.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within:
As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen:
And heaven did this transparent veil provide,
Because she had no guilty thought to hide.
Dryden, Epitaph 15.

The shade and fragrance of the contiguous woods, the loftiness of the overhanging rocks, and the transparence and frequent falls of the neighbouring streams, presented scenes of such elegance and dignity, as would with difficulty be rivalled in any other part of the globe.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 1.

I therefore had some buckets of water drawn up from along-side the ship, which we found full of an innumerable quantity of small globular insects, about the size of a common pin's head, and quite transparent.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 1.

The colouring is of a reddish kind, especially in the shadows without transparence.
Reynolds. A Journey to Flanders & Holland.

Lamps gracefully dispos'd, and of all hues,
Illumin'd ev'ry side: a wat'ry light
Gleam'd through the clear transparence, that seem'd
Another moon new ris'n, or meteor fall'n
From heav'n to earth, of lambent flame serene.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

TRANS-PASS, v. Fr. Transpasser.
To pass over or across; to surpass.

Trust not, vain creditor,
Thy apt-deceived view,
In thy false counsellor,
That never tells thee true.
Thy form and flatter'd hue,
Which shall so soon transpass,
Is far more fair than is thy looking-glass.
Daniel. A Description of Beauty.

TRANS-PATRONIZE, v. To transfer the patronage.

As to trans-patronize from him
To you mine orphan muse.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 43.

TRANS-PICUOUS (see CONSPICUOUS, PER-SPICUOUS) is equivalent to—Transparent, translucent.

—What if that light
Sent from her through the wide transpicuous aire,
To the terrestrial moon be as a starr
Enlightning her by day, as she by night
This earth?
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

And now thy wine's transpicuous, purg'd from all
Its earthly gross, yet let it feed a while
On the fat refuse, lest, too soon disjoin'd,
From sprightly, it to sharp-or vapid change.
J. Phillips. Cider, b. ii.

TRANS-PIERCE, v. Fr. Transpercer, (trans, and pierce.)
To strike, or thrust through; to penetrate thoroughly.

The king held only but an empty name,
Left with his life; whereof the proof was such,
As sharpest pride could not transperce the same,
Nor all-desiring greediness durst touch.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Is that brave spirit, that conquer'd so in France,
Thus overcome, and vanquish'd with a glance?
Is that great heart, that did aspire so high,
So soon transpierced with a woman's eye?
Drayton. Countess of Salisbury to the Black Prince.

— And, O belov'd
Of heav'n! whose well purg'd penetrative eye,
The mystic veil transpiercing, inly scann'd
The rising, moving, wide-establish'd frame.
Thomson. To the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

Heaven lighted-up the human soul,
Heaven bid its rays transpierce the whole,
And, giving godlike reason, gave us all.
Young. The Merchant, Strain 1.

TRANSPIRA'TION. } spirable. Fr. Transpirer;
It. Traspirare; Sp. Transpirar; Lat. Transpira-
tio, (from trans, and spirare.) See PERSPIRE.

To breathe over or through; to breathe out, to emit breath, air, steam, vapour; to evaporate; to come forth, to escape silently, secretly, as if breathed or whispered.

Blood and fleshy substance, which as in all other sub-lunary bodies that have internal principles of heat, useeth to transpire, breathe out, and waste away thro' invisible pores, by exercise, motion and sleep, to make room still for a supply of new nouriture.—Howell, b. i. Let. 31.

Our bodies may be said to be daily repair'd by new sustenance, which begets new blood, and consequently new spirits, new humours, and I may say new flesh, the old by continual deperdition and insensible transpirations evaporating still out of us, and giving way to flesh.—Id. Ib.

Yet would it be utterly unconceivable, how there should come to be, one such sensitive and rational atom in every man and no more, and how this should constantly remain the same, from infancy to old age, whilst other parts of matter transpire perpetually.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 825.

They conceive also, that the individuation and sameness of men's persons, does not necessarily depend upon the numerical identity of all the parts of matter, because we never continue thus the same, our bodies always flowing like a river, and passing away by insensible transpiration.
Id. Ib. p. 799.

This letter goes to you, in that confidence, which I always shall, and know that I safely may, place in you;—and you will not therefore let one word of it transpire.
Lord Chesterfield to S. Dayrolles, Jan. 1748.

Is it incredible, or can it seem
A dream to any, except those that dream,
That man should love his Maker, and that fire,
Warming his heart, should at his lips transpire?
Cowper. Conversation.

TRANS-PLACE, v. Fr. Transplacer, to place over; to change or remove from one place to another.

It [an obelisk] was transplaced, at the charges of Pope Sixtus the fifth, from the left side of the Vatican into a more eminent place, about a hundred foot off, where now it stands.—Wilkins. Archimedes, c. 10.

Such is the man, who heaps his head with bays,
And calls on human kind to sound his praise,
For points transplac'd with curious want of skill,
For flatten'd sounds, and sense amended ill.
Mallett. Of Verbal Criticism.

To move a plant from one place to another; generally,—to remove, to transpose, to transfer.

Our daughters so soone as they be married loose the surname of theyr father, and of the family and stocke whereof they doe come, and take the surname of their husbands, as transplanted from theyr family into another.
Sir T. Smith. Commonwealth b. iii. c. 8.

The Norman tradition is, that he, with divers other Danes, transplanting themselves, as well for dissension 'twixt him and his king, arriv'd here.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13. Selden. Illust.

Nor was it needful to retain the whole word: εστια having by its transplantation into the Greek tongue got a strong affinity with ιστηναι.
More. Defence of the Philos. Cabbala, App.

The dog continued [licking] so long, till he wasted the very kernels of ulcers, that were knit in with the veins, and perfectly cured the sore, but had the swelling transplanted to himself.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 167.

He told me, that he had, not very many months since, seen a cure by transplantation, performed on the son of one, that was wont to make chymical vessels for me.
Id. Ib.

Yet these, receiving grafts of other kind,
Or thence transplanted, change their savage mind;
Their wildness lose, and quitting Nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

The other three, who lived to have this opportunity of giving an account of their almost miraculous transplantation, spoke highly of the kind treatment they here met with.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

And throughout all our dominions and cities they shal hire carriers and vessels with men to labour, at their owne charge, to transport their goods.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 472.

Also certaine huge tunnes, and vessels of great quantity, being very finely and cunningly wrought, by reason of the danger and difficulty of carriage, are not transported out of the realme, but are used onely within it, and especially in the king's court.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 91.

The poore people there of being not set on worke, by reason of the transportation of raw wooll of late dayes more excessively then in times past shal by this meanes be restored to their pristinate wealth and estate.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 174.

That with the glorie of so goodly sight
The hearts of men, which fondly here admyre
Faire seeming shewes, and feed on vaine delight, Transported with celestiall desyre
Of those faire formes, may lift themselves up hyer.
Spenser. Of Heavenly Beautie, Hymne 4.

— O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deseruer.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act iii. sc. 2.

That we, who are old men, Christian philosophers and divines, should have so little government of ourselves, as to be puffed up with those poor accessions of titular respects, which those, who are rarely and hereditarily possessed of, can wield without any such taint or suspicion of transportedness!—Bp. Hall. Answer against the Bishops sitting in Parl.

Are not you he, when your fellow passengers,
Your last transportment being assay'd by a galley
Hid your self i' th' cabbin; and the fight done
Peep'd above hatches, and cry'd, have we taken,
Or are we tane?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Queen of Corinth, Act iv. sc. 1.

But Phoenix in his tent the chief retains,
Safe to transport him to his native plains,
When morning dawns; if other he decree,
His age is sacred, and his choice is free.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

All these different commodities are collected at Manila, thence to be transported annually in one or more ships, to the port of Acapulco, in the kingdom of Mexico.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 10.

The wind soon returning to its old corner, obliged us to put back to St. Helens, not without considerable hazard, and some damage received by two of the transports, who, in tacking, run foul of each other.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 1.

Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly,
With transport views the airy rule his own,
And swells on an imaginary throne.
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

If we had for God but half as much love as we ought, or even pretend to have, we could not but frequently (if not transportedly) entertain our selves with his leaves, which (as parheliions to the sun) are at once his writings and his picture.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 317.

Their canoe, which was a small double one, just large enough to transport the whole family from place to place, lay in a small creek near the huts.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 4.

These, we judged, were designed for transports, victuallers, &c.; for in the war canoes was no sort of provisions whatever.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 11.

If the countries are near, the difference will be smaller, and may sometimes be scarce perceptible; because in this case the transportation will be easy.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

TRANS-POSE, v. } Fr. Transposer; It.
TRANSPOSI'TION. } Trasporre; Sp. Trans- TRANSPOSI'TIONAL. } posicion; Lat. Transpo- situm, past part. of transponere, (trans and ponere, to put or place.)

To put or place over or across, from one place or position to another; to change places.

And after that out of hebrewe
Jerome, whiche the langage knewe,
The Bible, in whiche the lawe is closed,
In to Latine he hath transposed.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

In the time of king Canutus, the Cornish were appointed to make up the rear of our armies. Say not they were much degraded by this transposition from head to foot, seeing the judicious, in marshaling of an army, count the strength (and therefore the credit) to consist in the rear thereof.—Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

And wish the Heavens so much had graced mee,
As graunt me live in like condition;
Or that my fortunes might transposed bee
From pitch of higher place unto this low degree.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

Which driuing through the sands; he did reuerse
(His births-craft strait remembring) all their houses;
And them transpos'd, in opposite remoues;
The fore, behinde set; the behinde, before;
T' employ the eyes, of such as should explore.
Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Hermes.

I rather wish than expect, that you should give yourself the trouble, by transpositions of some, and retrenchments in others, to link them into a coherent discourse.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 716.

The reader will perceive in this transposition that the stations of the words are only changed, by which simple means the five couplets are transposed in Iambic measure.
Sir W. Jones. Hafiz, Note 1.

At last, they formed a double circle, as at the beginning, danced, and repeated very quickly, and finally closed with several very dexterous transpositions of the two circles.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 5.

The most striking and most offensive error in pronunciation among the Londoners, I confess, lies in the transpositional use of the letters w and e, ever to be heard when there is any possibility of inverting them. Thus they always say weal, instead of veal; vicked, for wicked.
Pegge. Anecdotes of the English Language.

TRANS-PROSE, v. To transpose prose into metre or verse.

Instinct he follows and no further knows,
For to write verse with him is to transpose.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

TRANS-RE/GIONATE. Of a region over (sea).

There are some cockes-combs here and there in England, learning it abroad as men transregionate.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 6.

TRANS-SHAPE, v. The Lat. prep. Trans, and the English verb, To shape, (qv.)
To change from one shape or form or figure to another; to transform, to transfigure.

Er. I were indeed a queen then.
Gonz. Madam, know
There's but a boy 'twixt you and it; suppose him
Transhap'd into an angel.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act iv.

Thus did shee an howre together trans-shape thy particular vertues, yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou was the preprost man in Italie.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act v. sc. 1.

TRANS-VA/SATE. Fr. Transvaser, to turn, pur, shift, remove out of one vessel into another, (Cotgrave.)

For the Father and Son are not, as they suppose, transvasated and poured out, one into another, as into an empty vessel: as if the Son filled up the concavity of the Father, and again the Father that of the Son; and neither of them were full or perfect in themselves.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 619.

TRAN-SUBSTANTIATE, v. } Fr. Trans-
TRANSUBSTANTIATION. } substantier; TRANSUBSTANTIATOR. } It. Transus-
tanziare; Sp. Transsubstanciar; Low Lat. Tran- substiantiare. See CONSUBSTANTIATE.

To change, to convert, from one substance into another. See the quotation from Secker.

The first say these wordes, This is my body: This is my blood compell vs to beleue; that thynges there shewed, are the very body and blood of Christ really. But bread and wyne say they cannot be Christes naturall body: therefore the bread and wyne, are chaunged, turned, altered and transubstantiated, into the very body & blood of Christ.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 445.

For in dede those transubstantiated Goddes, were knowne for no Goddes afore.—Bale. Apologie, fol. 63.

Now the stomach is like a crucible, for it hath a chymical kind of virtue to transmute one body into another, to transubstantiate fish and fruits into flesh within, and about us.

Howell, b. i. Let. 31.

They are driuen either to consubstantiate and incorporate Christ with elements sacramentall, or to transubstantiate and change their substance into his, and so the one to hold him really but inuisibly moulded vp with the substance of those elements, the other to hide him vnder the onely visible show of bread and wine, the substance whereof, as they imagine, is abolished, and his succeeded in the same roome.—Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. v. § 67.

But Suarez proceeds: But transubstantiation does most properly and appositely signifie the passage and conversion of the whole substance, into the whole substance.

Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 12.

Could transubstantiate, metamorphose,
And charm whole herds of beasts, like Orpheus;
Enchant the king's and church's lands,
T' obey and follow your commands.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

The Roman transubstantiators, affirm, that the body of our Lord is here upon earth at once present in many places (namely, in every place, where the Host is kept, or the Eucharist is celebrated).—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 31.

They have made it an article of faith, that the substance of these [the sacramental bread and wine] is, by the words of consecration, intirely changed into the substance of the living body and blood of Christ: which change, therefore, they call transubstantiation.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 31.

TRANS-UDE, v. } Lat. Trans, and sudare.
TRANSUDATION. } See EXUDE.

To send or emit moisture (udus), through; to emit steam or vapour; to evaporate.

Purulent fumes cannot be transmitted throughout the body before the maturation of an aposthem, nor after, unless the humour break; because they cannot transude through the bag of an aposthem.—Harvey. On Consumptions.

The drops proceeded not from the transudation of the liquors within the glass.—Boyle.

TRANS-VERSE, adj. } Fr. Transversal,
TRANSVERSE, n. } transversaire; It.
TRANSVERSE, v. } Trasverso, trasver-
TRANSVERSAL. } sale; Lat. Transver-
TRANSVERSALLY. } sus, from transvertere, TRANSVERSELY. } to turn over, across,
TRANSVERT, v. } athwart.

Turned or turning, lying or placed across, or athwart, or aside; awry; out of its straight line or course.

Ac treuthe that trespassed nevere. ne transversed agens the lawe.

Piers Plouhman, p. 241.

But of one thing I wold faine be expert,

Why mens langage wol procure and transuert

The will of women and virgines innocent?

Chaucer. The Craft of Lovers.

Your lordship must take a ruler or a compasse, and set the one foot of the compasse vpon the land or coast whose longitude you next know, and extend the other foot of the compasse to the wold part of one of the transuersall lines in the orientall or occidental part.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 214.

"Then since within this wide great universe

Nothing doth firme and permanent appeare;

But all things test and turned by transverse;

What then should let, but I aloft should reare

My trophee, and from all the triumph beare?"

Spenser. Faerie Queene. Of Mutabilitie, c. 7.

But the precepts or laws of Christ are like the Radii Propagiae, the grand parent of a family, from whom the direct descendants are for ever to be reckon'd to the kindred in the streight and proper line: but when once it goes to the transverse and collateral, they not only have no title to the inheritance, but every remove is a step to the losing the cognation and relation to the chief house.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

There are divers subtille enquiries and demonstrations, concerning the strength required to be in the string of them, the several proportions of swiftness and distance in an arrow shot vertically, or horizontally, or transversally.

Wilkins. Archimedes, c. 18.

How rang'd for motion, how for beauty mix'd:

With vital cement how th' extremes are fix'd;

How they agree in various ways to join

In a transverse, a straight, and crooked line.

Blackmore. Creation, b. vi.

But if I looked upon it transversely, the plot would appear very green, the upper parts of the peas hindering the intercepted parts of the ground, which, as I said, retained their wonted colour from being discovered by the eye.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 678.

Nothing can be believed to be religion by any people, but what they think to be divine; that is, sent immediately from God: and they can think nothing to be so, that is in the power of man to alter or transverse.—Leslie.

So that a transverse section of it has somewhat the appearance of the mark upon cards called a spade, the whole being much wider in proportion to its length.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 18.

It was pleasantly situated in a grove of trees, and appeared to be about thirty feet long, and seven or eight wide, high, with an open end, which represented an ellipse divided transversely.—Id. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 1.

TRANS-UME, v. } Fr. Transumpt, from TRANSMUMPT. } transumptum, past part.

TRANSUMPTION. } of trans-sumere, (trans, and sumere), to take over or across.

To take over or across; to change, or take in change, from one to another.

Transumpt,—a copy taken. See the old usage of transumption in Wilson.

Wherewith, the pretended original breve was produced, and a transumpt or copy thereof (signed by three bishops) offered them, to send to England.

State Trials. Hen. VIII. an. 1528. Div. of Q. Catherine.

Transumption is, when by degrees wee goe to that, which is to be shewed. As thus: such a one lieth in a dark dungeon; now in speaking of darknesse, we vnderstande closenesse, by closenesse, we gather blacknesse, & by blacknesse, we iudge deepenesse.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 178.

We affirm then, that it was not Paul's design to use these words, he gave gifts unto men, by way of citation out of David, but having by a kind of transumption and accommodation borrowed those former words of his, he ascended up on high.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 2.

But lest that die too, we are bid,

Ever to do what he once did.

And by a mindful, mystic breath,

That we may live, revive his death;

With a well-blest bread and wine

Transum'd, and taught to turn divine.

Crashaw. Hymn for the Sacrament.

TRANS-VOLATION. A flight or flying over or beyond.

Such things as these which are extraordinary egressions and transvolations beyond the ordinary course of an eaven piety, God loves to reward with an extraordinary favour; and gives them testimony by an extraregular blessing.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

TRAP, v. } Dut. Trappen; Ger. Treffen;

TRAP, n. } A.S. Treppan; Fr. Attraper; It.

Attrappare, to catch. See ENTRAP.

To catch or take; to overtake, or over-reach; to take in a snare: to ensnare, to beguile.

A trap,—a plaything, with a hollow to take or hold a ball; (met.) a snare, a stratagem.

But to speken of hire conscience,

She was so charitable and so pitous,

She wolde wepe if that she saw a mous

Caughte in a trappe, if it were ded or bledde.

Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 142.

But Adrastus sothly thought another

Best was to send, than himself to gone,

Lest he were trapped among his mortal fone.

Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

Thus he, whom golde hath ouerset,

Was trapped in his owne nette.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Thei shal be trapped and taken in their owne snares & fall into ye pitt whiche theselues had digged vp.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 1.

And so they rode to the barryers of the towne; and within with the seneshall of Heynaulte, were a fyfte speares, and he caused the barryers to be opened, and had thought to haue trapped those fore ryders, and so fell to chasyng of them.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 362.

The ambassadour, whom they thought to be capitaine, would not goe, nor suffer the trumpets to be sounded, for that he thought it was a trappe to take himselfe, and more of his company.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 167.

Although our bodyes suffer payne in thys lyfe yet our soules be deluyered from these deuylles snares lyke as three sparowe is from the bates and trappes of byrde takers that bee aboute to catch her.

Fisher. Seuen Psalms, Ps. 143. pt. i.

For on a bridge he custometh to fight,

Which is but narrow, but exceeding long;

And in the same are many trap-fals pight,

Through which the rider downe doth fall through oversight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

This said, he tooke his mantles formost part,

And gan the same together fold and wrap;

Then spake againe with fell and spitefull heart,

(So lions roar enclos'd in traine or trap.)

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. ii. s. 89.

He said; but his last words were scarcely heard:

For Bruce and Longvil had a trap prepar'd,

And down they sent the yet declaiming bard.

Dryden. Mac-Flecknoe.

The number of the witnesses being so great, and the Jews having every day opportunity of conversing with them, they might have easily trapp'd them in their relations.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Whilst from below the trap-door demons rise,

And from above the dangling deities.

Goldsmith. Epil. by Mr. L. Lewes.

TRAP, v. } Trappings, (says Skinner,)

TRAPPER. } Minshew derives from the Fr.

TRAPPINGS. } Drap, cloth. Trappours, by which G. Douglas renders Phalerae, the Gloss. derives from the Fr. Draperie; but Douglas also renders—Redimicula (ribbands), (Æn. ix. 616,) by this same trappours: and hence Lye supposes trappours may have been first applied to the ribbands—not without their ornaments—and thence transferred to the phalerae of a horse: what he thence inferred to be the etymology, he does not say. It may be remarked, that redimiculum, (from redimire, to bind round,) is also applied as equivalent to laqueus, a noose, a snare: and we seem hence to be led to a conjecture, that trap, trappings, have the same origin as trap, to take, to catch; to hold. Trappings,—applied to certain holdings, fastenings, bindings, trimmings of the housings, or coverings of a horse; ornamented, decorated: and then, generally,—

Any ornaments, decorations, embellishments; ornamented dresses or dressings, or trimmings.

With Arcida, in stories as men find,

The gret Emetrius the king of Jude,

Upon a stede bay, trapped in stele,

Covered with cloth of gold diapred wele,

Came riding like the god of armes Mars.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2157.

And euery claspe and naile as to my sight

Of their harnais were of red gold fine,

With cloth of gold, and furred with ermine

Were the trappours of their stedes strong,

Wide and large, that to the ground did hong.

Id. The Floure and the Leafe.

Cōpare this commune asses foale that caried Jesus, with so many mules trapped with silke, & clothe of golde: with so many royall coursers with great horses.

Udal. Marke, c. 11.

In recompensment wherof, the mayre and burgeyses of that towne presented the kyng with vii. stegys, trappyd in cloth of sylke and other presandes.

Fabyan. Chronycle. Phil. III. of France, an. 1.

The lorde Courcy, the lorde Clisson, and Guy de la Tremoyll, admyrall of ye see, and dyuers other, on great coursers trapped to the erthe in clothe of golde.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 369.

And foure elephants brauely furnished doe drawe the sayd chariot, before which elephants foure great horses fully trapped and couered doe lead the way.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 62.

There were many that to our iudgement, had vpon their bridles, trappers, saddles, and such like furniture, to the value of 20 markes in pure gold.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 67.

Also they brought many horses & mules vnto him furnished w^t trappers and caparisons, some being made of leather, and some of iron.—Id. Ib. p. 69.

At the sudden comming of the Welshmen and Cornishmen, so huge a noise was raised by the sound of bells hanging at their trappers and charets, that the Romans astonied therewith, were more easilie put to flight.

Holinshed. Historie of England, b. iii. c. 13.

— Why should not I
Doat on my horse well trapt, my sword well natch'd?
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act ii. sc. 2.

Tor. If she can make me blest? she only can:
Empire, and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love.
Dryden. The Spanish Fryar, Act iv.

— At his command
The steeds caprison'd with purple stand;
With golden trappings, glorious to behold,
And champ, betwixt their teeth, the foaming gold.
Id. Virgil. Æneis, b. vii.

TRAPE, v. } Skinner derives from the Ger.
TRAPE, n. } Traben, Dut. Trappen, to tramp.
To tramp, or rather—to trail up and down idly—like a slut or sloven.

Two slip-shod muses traipse along,
In lofty madness, meditating song,
With tresses staring from poetic dreams,
And never wash'd, but in Castalia's streams.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iii.

Let him in part be made your pattern
Whose muse, now queen, and now a slattern,
Trick'd out in Rosciad rules the roast,
Turns trapes and trollop in the ghost.
Lloyd. The Cobbler of Cripplegate's Letter.

TRAPEZIUM. } Fr. Figure trapèze, un-
TRAPEZOÏD. } equally sided and cornered.
A quadrilateral figure, which has not its pair of opposite sides parallel.

Suppose but a man, not to have a perfect exact idea of a right angle, a scalenum, or trapezium; and there is nothing more certain, than that he will in vain seek any demonstration about them.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 12.

TRASH, v. } This word has much employed TRASH, n. } the commentators on Shake-TRA'SHY. } speare.—Skinner makes it to be the same word with dross, as applied to any thing worthless; but he does not attempt to account for the other usages of the word. The Fr.
Trasher, trasser, is to trace; to put in traces, to confine or restrain in traces.

A trash,—any thing (man, dog) trashed or traced or confined in traces, that it may not, because it would, run or pursue too fast, rashly;—like an untrained dog; a worthless hound: hence, it is—any thing worthless; any trumpery:—unripe, unwholesome, things, (fruits, sweets, &c.) are called trash. And To trash is, generally—

To restrain, or hold in, to withhold, to curb, to check—and farther, to lop, to prune.

The Fr. Trasser is, also,—to make the first (rude) tracing; the outline or profile; and, consequently, unfinished, imperfect; of little value, worthless.

To come trashing after (see quotation from The Puritan,) is to come tracing after—following the track or trace, like hounds in a pack; or, as the editor of the Ancient British Drama affirms—like a hound with a trash, or long piece of rope fastened to his collar, and dragging loose on the ground.

Mr. Brockett and the Craven Dialect, say—
To trash, is—"to tramp about with fatigue:"— it is merely to trace, to keep in a trace or course;
to keep tracing about, pacing about.

And so throwng fourth that trashe which tempted him (if the legende be true) at the last he made her an holy vowesse & veyled nonne to serue the spirituale.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

And little else [is] bought or sold in them more than good drinke, pies, and some pedlerie trash.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 15.

Nen. And what did you then, Caratach?
Car. I fled too,
But not for fast; your jewel had been lost then,
Young Hengo there; he trasht me, Nennius:
But when your fears out-run him, then stept I,
And in the head of all the Romans fury
Took him, and, with my tough belt, to my back
I buckled him.—Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act i. sc. 1.

Pros. Being once perfected how to graunt suites,
How to deny them: who t' aduance, and who
To trash for ouer-topping; new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd 'em,
Or els new form'd 'em.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 2.

— Which thing to do,
If this poore trash of Venice, whom I trace
For his quicke hunting, stand the putting on,
He haue our Michael Cassio on the hip.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 1.

The words in Greek are not (that you cannot do) but (that you do not) and the sence is either 1. That this contrariety always interposes some objections to hinder or trash you from doing the things that you would, i.e. sometimes the Spirit trashes you from doing the thing that the Spirit would have done.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 23.

The contrary wherto is prolongation of magistracy, which, trashing the wheel of rotation, destroys the life or natural motion of a commonwealth.
Harrington. Prerog. of Popular Government, c. 12.

Mary. A guarded lacky to run before it, and pied liveries to come trashing after 't.
Anonymous. The Puritan, Act iv. sc. 1.

The persons who now set up for free-thinkers, are such as endeavour, by a little trash of words and sophistry, to weaken and destroy those very principles, for the vindication of which, freedom of thought at first became laudable and heroic.—Tatler, No. 135.

How possibly can he bear in his heart any affection to God, who will not for his sake, and at his instance, part with a little worthless trash, and dirty pelf?
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

For my own part, I have both so just a diffidence of myself, and so great a reverence for my audience, that I dare venture nothing without a strict examination; and am as much asham'd to put a loose indigested play upon the publick, as I should be to offer brass money in a payment: for though it shoud be taken, (as it is too often on the stage,) yet it will be found in the second telling: and a judicious reader will discover in his closet that trashy stuff, whose glittering deceiv'd him in the action.
Dryden. Spanish Fryar, Epis. Ded.

In this Cystis was contained a trash, not unlike hair or wooll. This person was subject to these preternatural tumours. He had one caused by the waist-band of his breeches, which I afterwards cut out; it contained the same kind of trash.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. iv. c. 4.

For sordid lucre, plunge we in the mire?
Drudge, sweat, through every shame, for every gain,
For vile contaminating trash; throw up
Our hope in Heaven, our dignity with man?
Young. Complaint, Night 6.

Who steeps the calfe's fat loin in greasy sauce
Will hardly loathe the praise that bastes an ass.
Who riots on Scotch collops scorns not any Inspid, fulsome, trashy miscellany.
Armstrong. To a Young Critic.

TRA'VAIL, or } Fr. Travailler; It. Trava- TRA'VEL, v. & n. } gliare; Sp. Trabajar. Various TRA'VELLER. } conjectures are recorded in TRA'VELLING, n. } Menage's French and Italian etymologies. Skinner thinks it is from Trans- valere; (q.d.) something beyond the strength, or above that which any one (valet) is able to effect:
the Lat. Tribulare has also been suggested.—In the passages quoted below from Wiclif, the Version of 1551 has in the first example—vexed; in the second—diseasest; and in the third—trouble.
Our Common Version has troublest, trouble, in the two latter instances. And there seems little reason to doubt, that the A. S. Tribulan, also written trifel-an, to break, to bruise, to pound, to vex, is the root of traveil or trouble. See TROUBLE.

To trouble,—to vex, to harass, to molest, to disquiet, or disease, to distress; to toil, to labour; to pain, or take pains; to weary. And thus,—

To go or pass a wearisome length of way; to take or make a toilsome or laborious journey; to journey, to go or pass (on foot or in carriage) along the way, the road, through a country—over the sea.

 ance of its success, with the means employed to bring it about, and with those which were employed to traverse it.
 Bolingbroke. Letter to Sir W. Windham.

Since the 8th of this month, we had twice traversed this sea, in lines nearly parallel with the run we had just now made; in the first of those traverses we were not able to penetrate so far north by eight or ten leagues, as in the second.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 4.

[The subject] may traverse or deny the matter of fact itself.—These traverses were greatly enlarged and regulated for the benefit of the subject.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 17.

Thus the land of philosophy contains partly an open champion country, passable by every common understanding, and partly a range of woods traversable only by the speculative, and where they too frequently delight to amuse themselves.—Search. Light of Nature, Introd.

TRAVESTY, v. } Skinner says,—concealed TRA'VESTY, n. } from the eyes of men by change of vest. Fr. Travestir, se travestir, "to disguise, to shift his apparel, (i. e. his vesture), to mask it, to take on him another man's habit;
 to play the counterfeit," (Cotgrave.)

To change the vest or garb; to put on, or assume another dress (usually in burlesque).

This gentleman in his first works abused the character of Mr. Dryden; and in his last, of Mr. Pope, accusing him in very high and sober terms of profaneness and immorality on a mere report from Edm. Curll, that he was author of a travestie on the first psalm.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii. Rem. on v. 268.

Old naturalism, thus travestied in the garb of new religion, his lordship bestowes, as his last and most precious legacy, on his own dear country: if you will believe him, the only reformed religion that can be called pure, and the only revealed religion that has the mark of truth.

Custom settles habits of thinking in the understanding, as well as of determining in the will, and of motions in the body: all which seems to be but trains of motion in the animal spirits, which once set a going, continue in the same steps they have been us'd to; which, by often treading, are worn into a smooth path, and the motion in it becomes easy, and as it were natural.

TREND, v. } Is perhaps formed upon the TRENDING, n. } past part. Tyrn-ed, tyrn'd, of the
A. S. Tyrnan, vertere, to turn, by the common transposition of the letter r. The Dut. and Ger.
Trennen, disjungere, divertere, seem to be the same word.

The A. S. Trendle is a spinning wheel, a trendle; any thing turned; a bowl, an orb.

To trend is—

To turn; to make or take a turn; to turn away, to diverge, to bend, to bend its course.

And this done, there came downe so muche winde, as we were not able to steere before her, with corse and bonnets of each, we hald south with the land, for so the land did trend.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 448.

(Cotgrave.) This (Trepane) Huet (see Menage) derives from the Gr. Τρυπανον, a word, he adds, of the same meaning. Τρυπανον is from Τρυπα-ειν, to perforate, to penetrate. And (Cotgrave) the Fr. Trappan is—"a stone-cutter's drill; the tool wherewith he bores little holes in marble." The trephine was a smaller instrument.

But the English verb Trepan or trapan, is to entrap; and Skinner, by a violent, and rather ludicrous metaphor, deduces this application from the surgical operation: others, he tells us, derive from Trepani, a town of Sicily, into which some English in a storm were invited, and then detained.

To trepan or (more properly trapan, though written without distinction,) to entrap, is the Dut.
Trappen. See TRAP.

To catch or take; to overtake, to overreach,
to take in a snare; to ensnare, to beguile.

TREPIDATION. Fr. Trépidation; It. *Tre-

TRE/SSURED. } tresses. It. Trèccia; Sp. Trenza, trenzar. Skinner thinks that it may be from tricare, intricare. (See INTRICATE.) Caseneuve,— from the Gr. Τρίσσο, three, because a tress is formed by interlacing three pieces. Menage,—that the Italian is from the Gr. Θρίξ, τριχος, hair. In A. S. Thræs, or thres, is a fringe; and threast-an, is to wreath, to twist. (See Lye, and Somner.)
A twist is any thing twiced; a thread, or thrid, is, perhaps, any thing thre-ed, thred, or thrid; and a tress may be, any thing triced or thriced,—thus bringing home the etymology of Caseneuve. A tress, then, will be—

A three-fold or tripled portion or quantity: a lock or curl (of hair): any thing hanging like the hair.

the question, how God is one, as some moderns do, by leaving out the Son and the Holy Ghost, and placing the unity in the Father only; but their way was to take in all the three persons, and so to make up the monad of the undivided triad.—Id. Ib.

It seems, however, as if he himself recognized the fault of perpetual triads in his style, since they are by no means frequent in his last productions.—Knox. Ess. No. 28.

before the winde.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 818.

The city it selfe in forme representeth a triangular figure, the sea washing the walles vpon two sides thereof, the other side faceth the continent of Thracia.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 308.

— Thus as these legions coast
On Danemore they are met, indifferent for this war,
Whereas three easy hills that stand triangular,
Small Edgcoat overlook.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

The geometrician never consulteth as touching a triangle, to wit, whether it hath three angles equall to twaine that be right, or no? because he knoweth assuredly that it hath, for all consultations are concerning things that alter and vary sometime after one sort, and otherwhiles after another.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 56.

And after another manner likewise of composition, it [the number of nine] standeth of two triangled numbers to wit, a senary, and a ternary, whereof both the one and the other is a perfect number.—Id. Ib. p. 652.

That the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones, is a truth as certain as any thing can be, and I think more evident than many of those propositions that go for principles.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

These bars stood all parallel to the ground, and their further ends, which stood triangularly and opening from each other at equal distances, like the fliers of our kitchen-jacks, were made exactly in the shape of the paw of some monstrous beast.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

We say, for instance, not only that certain figures are triangular, but we discourse of triangularity.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 1. On Human Knowledge.

Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves,
Draw the live ether, and imbibe the dew.
Thomson. Spring.

Among those councils, let not mine be vain,
In tribes and nations to divide thy train;
His separate troops let every leader call,
Each strengthen each, and all encourage all.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The subject is a sceptre, which could in no sense, not even in the sense of a tribal sceptre, be in possession of Judah before he became a tribe.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 3.

The book of Numbers informs us (we see) that even the tribal sceptre was established long after the death of Jacob.

And Christ foretold to us tribulation, and promised only that he would be with us in tribulation, that he would give us his Spirit to assist us at tribunals, and his grace to despise the world, and to contemn riches, and boldness to confess every article of the Christian faith in the face of armies and armed tyrants.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

They thinke also, that the tribunale was an impeachment, inhibition, and restraint of a magistracy, rather than a magistracy it self: for all the authority and power of the tribune, lay in opposing himself, and crossing the jurisdiction of other magistrates, and in diminishing or repressing their excessive and licentious power.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 718.

The scarlet judge might now set up his mule,
With neighing steeds the streets so pester'd are;
For where he went in Westminster to rule,
On his tribunal sate the man of war.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Curio that yeere, wherein he did defile
Divine, and human lawes, striu'd to exile
By tribunitiall law from Libyas throne
This king, and barre him his forefathers crowne,
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

And let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is, to clamour counsels not to enforme them.—Bacon. Ess. Of Counsell.

But to say a truth, this tribuneship having taken originally the first beginning from the common people is great and mighty in regard that it is popular.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 718.

He plainly touches at the office of the high priesthood, with which Augustus was invested: and which made his person more sacred and inviolable than even the *tribuniti*al power.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

This, goddess, this to his remembrance call,
Embrace his knees, at his tribunal fall.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Such was the erection of that sacred, *tribuniti*al power, whose prerogatives served to check the usurpations of the magistrates, and who could arrest with one word even the proceedings of the senate.

Bolingbroke. Remarks on the History of England.

The tribunes, when they had a mind to animate the eople against the rich and the great, put them in mind of the ancient divisions of lands, and represented that law which restricted this sort of private property as the fundamental law of the republic.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

TRIBUTE. } Fr. Tribut; It. Tributo;
TRIBUTARY, adj. } Sp. Tributo; Lat. Tributum, TRIBUTARY, n. } so called, a tribubus, because this money, required from the people, was exacted through the tribes (tributum), in proportion to the estimated value of the estate or property of each. See the quotation from Holland's Livy. See ATTRIBUTE and CONTRIBUTE.

Tribute.—sum paid, portion paid; tax, assessment; impost, subsidy; a token or acknowledgement of subordination. Tributary.—

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Up rose he Julius the conquerour,
That wan all the occident. by lond and see,
By strengthe of hond, or elles by tretee,
And unto Rome made hem tributarie.

Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,590.

To his empire, and to his lawes,
As who saith, all in thilke dawes
Were obeisant, and tribute bere,
As though he god of erthe were.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For having divided the citie into foure wards, according to the quarters and hills; those parts which were inhabited, he called tribes, of the word tribute (as I suppose) for he it was that devised and brought up the manner of equall contribution and paiment, proportionably to the assesment and rate of men's goods.—Holland. Livies, p. 31.

Thenceforth this land was tributarie made
T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
Till Arthur all that reckoning defrayd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

As such we lov'd, admir'd, almost ador'd,
Gave all the tribute mortals could afford,
Perhaps we gave so much, the powers above
Grew angry at our superstitious love.

Dryden. On the Death of a Young Gentleman.

The two great empires of the world I know,
That of Peru, and this of Mexico;
And since the earth none larger does afford,
This Charles is some poor tributary lord.
Dryden. The Indian Emperor, Act i. sc. 2.

But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the seas in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt the breast;
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest.
Id. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

But whether or no they are tributaries to the Russians, we could never find out. There was some reason to think that they are.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 11.

TRIBUTION. Lat. Tributio, from tribuere, to pay.

"I shall tell thee," (quod she) "tribucion of thy good willes, to haue of thy Margarite perle, it beareth not the name of mede, but onely of good grace, and that cometh not of thy desert, but of thy Margarites goodnesse, and vertue alone."—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. iii.

TRICE. Fr. Trois, three; in a trice or thrice (three-es).

In three—moments, minutes; or before you can say or tell three.

And whan that he him moste auanteth,
That lorde, whiche vainglorie daunteth,
All sodenly, as who saith treis,
Where that he stode in his paleis.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

What makes the waxen forme appearances, with imposing ornaments; to adorn, to deck, to embellish; to dress with finery, ostentatiously.

A trick,—a snare, a deception, an artifice; an artful, an artificial habit or practice; an habitual manner, way or practice.

To trick, in heraldry (see the quotation from B. Jonson),—to draw with a pen (in profile).

Trick, n. in B. Jonson, is perhaps Tress. Old Fr. Trèce; It. Trèccia; or Low Lat. Trica, crines intexti. See Du Cange.

Tricksy, i. e. trickish, artful, dexterous, adroit, active, smart.

Thei red him alle a mysse, that conseil gaf therto.
Wenes he our men Englisse for to treether so?
R. Brunne, p. 164.

A neighbour mine not long ago there was,
But nameless he, for blameless he shall be,
That married had a trick and bonny lass,
As in a summer day a man might see.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

The next day in the morning I was saluted at my gate with men in complet harnesses, what time my souldiers were about to play mee a shrewde tricke.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 334.

For he [Cato] found not his countrey (as Phocion did) utterly destroyed, but tossed in a dangerous tempest; and being not of authority like the pilot to take the stern in hand, and governing the ship, he took himself to tricking the sails, and preparing the tackle, so to assist men of greater power.—North. Plutarch, p. 624.

They forget they are in the statute, the rascals; they are blazoned there; there they are trick'd, they and their pedigrees; they need no other heralds, I wiss.

B. Jonson. The Poetaster, Act i. sc. 1.

— Know, thou trickt up toy,
My love's a violent flood, where art thou faln,
Playing with which tide thou'dst been greatly toss'd,
By crossing it, thou art or'whelm'd, and lost.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act i. sc. 1

So maist thou chauce mock out a benefice,
Unless thou canst one conure by device,
Or cast a figure for a bishoprick;
And if one could, it were but a schoole trick.

Warner. Albion's England, b. vi. c. 31.

The foole hath planted in his memory
An armie of good words, and I doe know
A many fooles that stand in better place,
Garnisht like him, that for a tricksie word
Defie the matter.
Shakespeare. The Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 5.

By thus perplexing and diluting it, they really weakened it: for it is much easier to oppose it as it stands tricked up in that scholastic form, than as it stands in Scripture and in the antient fathers.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 53.

This is like Merry-Andrew on the low rope, copying lubberly the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

At Southwark, therefore as his tricks he show'd,
To please our masters, and his friends the crowd.
Prior. Merry Andrew.

The chief reasoner of that philosophic farce is a Gallo Ligur, as he is call'd—what that means in English or French, I can't say—but all he says, is in so loose and slippery and trickish a way of reasoning.

Atterbury to Pope, March 26, 1721.

— Vice,
Though well perfum'd and elegantly dress'd,
Like an unburied carcase trick'd with flow'rs,
Is but a garnish'd nuisance, fitter far
For cleanly riddance, than for fair attire.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

We presently discovered that they were as expert thieves, and as tricking in their exchanges, as any people we had yet met with.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 7.

As his preeminence depends not upon a trick, he is free from the painful suspicions of a juggler, who lives in perpetual fear lest his trick should be discovered.

Reynolds, vol. i. Dis. 2.

It [the world] will shew you, that tricking, and deceit of various kinds, are very consistent with christianity.

Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 9.

I am unwilling to inflame that odium, which confounding the innocent with the guilty, has branded the whole tribe with charges of duplicity, management, artifice, and trickishness, approaching to the imputation of arrant knavery.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 24.

TRICKER. See TRIGGER.

TRICKLE, v. Skinner supposes treckelen, a dim. of Dut. Trecken, to trace; "to flow," he adds, "as drops in a long continuous track or course." It may be merely the dim. of track, q. d.; trackle, by the change of the vowel. Serenius and Dr. Jamieson resort to the Islandic. See Trigle, in Jamieson.

To run in a thin or slender course or stream, in drips or drippings; to distil.

 the necessity of trifling away age.
 Bolingbroke. Of Retirement & Study.

If trifles engage, and if trifles make us happy, the true reflection suggested by the experiment, is upon the tendency of nature to gratification and enjoyment; which is, in other words, the goodness of its Author towards his sensitive creation.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

I hate the dust that fierce disputers raise,
 And lose the mind in a wild maze of thought:
 What empty triflings, and what empty ways,
 To fence and guard by rule and rote.
 Watts. True Learning.

TRI-FLUCTUATION. A concurrence of three waves, (tres fluctus.)

The Greeks to expresse the greatest wave, do use the number of three, that is, the word τρικυμια, which is a concurrence of three waves in one, whence arose the proverb τρικυμια κακων, or a trifluctuation of evils, which Erasmus doth render malorum decumanus.
 Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 17.

TRI-FO/LIATE. Having three leaves, (tria folia.)

Trifoliate cytissus restrain'd its boughs
 For humble sheep to crop, and goats to browse.
 Harte. Eulogius.

TRI-FORM. Lat. Triformis, three formed, or having three forms; boviform, formed like an ox;
 hominiform, formed like a man.

There the neighbouring moon
 (So call that opposite fair starr) her aide Timely interposes, and her monthly round
 Still ending, still renewing, through mid heav'n;
 With borrow'd light her countenance triform
 Hence fills and empties to enlighten th' earth,
 And in her pale dominion checks the night.
 Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

And the old philosophick atheists, were so frank and lavish herein, that they stuck not to affirm, amongst those monstrous shapes of animals that were once produced, Centaurs, and Scyllas, and chimeras; mixtly boviform and hominiform, biform and triform animals.
 Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 673.

TRIGAMY. A third marriage. See BIGAMY.

They marry oft-times at nine or twelve years of age; the laity twice, ecclesiasticks but once; trigamy to all is hateful.
 Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 158.

TRIGGER, or } Skinner suggests the Dut.
 TRICKER. } Dregghe, harpago, uncus, as he explains it. But the Dut. is a Dragge, and trecken, is to drag; and a trigger, whether to hold a wheel, or loose the cock of the gun, is a drag—

That which drags, or that which we drag or pull.

And as a goose
 In death contracts his talons close,
 So did the knight, and with one claw,
 The tricker of his pistol draw.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

The pulling the trigger of the gun, with which the murder is committed, and is all the action that perhaps is visible, has no natural connection with those other ideas that make up the complex one, nam'd murder.
 Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 9.

Pulling a trigger or drawing characters upon paper are neither good nor bad, right nor wrong, considered in themselves; but as the trigger so pulled shall occasion the slaughter of a man, or of some vermin, or only a bounce in the air; as the characters so drawn shall tend to the necessary security of our property, or to bring a hardship upon our neighbour, or shall carry no meaning at all, we pronounce the action prudent or idle, moral or wicked.
 Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 2.

TRIGLYPH. Fr. Triglyphe; It. Triglifo;
 Sp. Triglifo,—

Having tres glyphas; Gr. Γλυφη, a grave or groove; Γλυφ-ειν, to grave. See the quotation from Evelyn.

The Dorique order is the gravest that hath been received into civil use, preserving, in comparison of those that follow, a more masculine aspect, and little trimmer than the Tuscan that went before, save a sober garnishment now and then of lions' heads in the cornice, and of triglyphs and metopes always in the frieze.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 24.

The triglyphs, which I affirm'd to be charged on the Doric freeze, is a most inseperable ornament of it. The word τριγλυφος, in Greek imports a three sculptur'd piece,— quasi tres habens glyphas. By their triangular furrows, or gutters rather, they seem to me as if they were meant to convey the guttæ or drops which hang a little under them.
 Evelyn. On Architecture.

TRIGON. } Fr. Trigonometrie; It.
 TRIGONAL. } Trigonometria; Gr. *Τρι-TRIGONOMETRY. } γωνος, a triangle, (τρις, TRIGONOMETRICAL. } γωνια), and μετρεω, to measure.*

Trigon,—a figure having three angles.

Trigonometry,—the measurement of triangles,
 of their sides and angles.

As when the cranes direct their flight on high,
 To cut their way, they in a trigon file;
 Which pointed figure may with ease diuide
 Opposing blasts, through which they swiftly glide.
 Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

A spar of a yellow hue shot into numerous trigonal pointed shoots of various sizes, found growing to one side of a perpendicular fissure of a stratum of free-stone.—Woodward.

Such a comparison of the sides and angles of a triangle, by which, from certain sides and angles known in the said triangle, the reason of the other angles may be found to a right one, or the proportion of the other sides to the one assigned and known, this is called trigonometry.
 Barrow. Mathematical Lectures, Lect. 15.

Trigonometrical surveys for the purpose of measuring a degree of a meridian in different latitudes, and thence inferring the figure of the earth, have been undertaken by different philosophers, under the patronage of different governments.—Hutton. Course of Mathematics, vol. iii. c. 5.

The trigonometrical survey in England was first commenced, in conjunction with similar operations in France, in order to determine the difference of longitude between the meridians of the Greenwich and Paris observatories.
 Id. Ib. vol. iii. c. 5.

TRI-LA'TERAL. Having or consisting of three sides (tria latera).

TRI-LI'TERAL. Having or consisting of three letters (tres literas). See BILITERAL.

The Arabick roots are universally trilateral.

"Sire, ther n'is no man to sain,
 But whan you list to riden any where,
 Ye moten trill a pin, stant in his ere."

Chaucer. The Squires Tale, v. 10,628.

Ne will I yet affray the doubtfull hartes
 Of such as seeke for welth in warre to fal,
 By thundring out the sundrie sodaine smartes
 Which daily chaunce as fortune trilles the ball.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

While Philomel is ours; while in our shades,
 Through the soft silence of the listening night,
 The sober suited songstress trills her lay.

Thomson. Summer.

The truth is, I have often pitied, in a winter night, a vocal musician, and have attributed many of his trills and quavers to the coldness of the weather.—Tatler, No. 222.

Within my limits lone and still
 The blackbird pipes in artless trill.

Warton. Inscription in a Hermitage.

TRILL, v. Corrupted from Trickle, (qv.)

To run in a thin or slender course or stream, in drips or drippings; to distil.

And whan this abbot had this wonder sein,
 His salte teres trilled adoun as reyne.

Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,603.

Nor shed my trilling teares upon thy moisted face?

Nor say to thee, Tymet adue,
 when thou departst the place?

Turberville. Pyndara's Answer to Tymes.

And yet, through languour of her late sweet toyle,
 Few drops, more cleare then nectar, forth distild,
 That like pure orient perles adowne it trild.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

I feel my sinews slacken'd with the fright,
 And a cold sweat trills down o'er my limbs,
 As if I were dissolving into water.

Dryden. Tempest, Act ii.

 form or shape.

To dress; to array, to rig; to set out, in order, neatness or niceness.

To decorate. To trim, (met.) is—

To suit or adapt, or accommodate, (sc.) to circumstances, to expedients; to prepare for the safest side.

[Sir Andrewe Dudley] being but single mæned, had a greate conflicte with three Scottishe shippes, beeyng double manned and trimmed with ordinaunce, in the narrow seas, and obtained the victorie.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1546.

He rayseed an engyn in ye castell, the which was nat very great, but he trymmed it to a poynt.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 59.

There hang downe certaine square flappes compacted of a kinde of strawe which is made rough and rugged with extreme heat, and is so trimmed, that it glittereth in the sunne beames, like vnto a glasse, or an helmet well burnished.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 116.

It taketh no rote in a briery place, ne in marice, nether in the sande that fleeteth awaye, but it requireth a pure, a trymme and a substaunciall ground.—Udal. James, c. 1.

As though a manne would caste myre in another mannes face, that he hym selfe myght seme the fayrer: and arraye an other mannes garment with fylthynes, that he him selfe myght seme the more trym.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

Some man either by lustines of nature, or brought by ill teaching to a wrong judgement, is over full of wordes, sentences, and matter: and yet all his wordes be proper, apt, and well chosen; all his sentences be rownd, and trimlie framed.—Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

Therefore then lette passe al that trimming and araying of her body, which whē her husband liued, might seeme to be done for pleasure.

 pointed with good mariners and men of warre.

Holinshed. Chronicle. Edw. III. an. 1372.

And when they ceast, it gan againe to play,
 The whiles the maskers marched forth in trim aray.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

— And there's

Another of 'em, a trim cheating souldier,
 I'll maul that rascal, h'as out-brav'd me twice.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act ii.

Wayting to passe he saw whereas did swim
 Along the shore, as swift as glaunce of eye,
 A litle gondelay, bedecked trim
 With boughes and arbours woven cunningly,
 That like a litle forrest seemed outwardly.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Pen. My honour got thorow fire, thorow stubborn breaches
 Thorow battels that have been as hard to win as heaven,
 Thorow death himself, in all his horrid trims,
 Is gone for ever.

Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iv. sc. 3.

But Calidore of courteous inclination,
 Tooke Coridon and set him in his place,
 That he should lead the daunce, as was his fashion;
 For Coridon could daunce, and trimly trace.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

Now the English-men's powder failed them, their pikes were broken, all their stoutest men either slain or hurt, their masts and trimmers overthrown, their cables cut, &c.

Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1591.

Religion is like the fashion; one man wears his doublet slashed, another laced, another plain; but every man has a doublet; so every man has his religion: we differ about the trimming.—Selden. Table Talk. Religion.

The seat the soft wool of the bee,
 The cover (gallantly to see)
 The wing of a py'd butterflye,

I trow, 'twas simple trimming

Drayton. Nymphidia. The Court of Fairy.

And set forth hyacinths with iron-blue,
 To shade marsh marigolds of shining hue.
 Some bound in order, others loosely strow'd,
 To dress thy bower, and trim thy new abode.

Dryden. Virgil, Past 4.

That done, bears up to th' prize, and views each limb;
 To know her by her rigging and her trimm.

Id. Conquest of Granada, pt. ii. Prol.

So when some beauteous dame, a reigning toast,
 The flower of Forth, and proud Edina's boast,
 Stands at her toilet in her tartan plaid,
 In all her richest head-geer trimly clad.

Somerville. To Allan Ramsay.

A trimmer cry'd, (that heard me tell this story)
 Fie, Mistress Cooke! faith you're too rank a Tory!
 Wish not Whiggs hang'd, but pity their hard cases.

Dryden. Epilogue to the Duke of Guise.

His double trimming character prevailed on him to talk with the duke of Ormond: but it carried him no farther.

Bolingbroke. Letter to Sir W. Windham.

He, who went about to allay this extravagant ferment, was called a trimmer; and he who was in truth a common friend, was sure of being treated as a common enemy.

Id. Upon Parties, Let. 6.

The academician would pass, if he could, for a neuter, who is for no side, nor against any; or else for a trimmer, who changes sides often, and finds the probable sometimes on one, sometimes on the other.

Id. Fragments of Essays, § 31.

Those, says Quintilian, who are taken with the outward show of things, think that there is more beauty in persons, who are trimmed, curled, and painted, than uncorrupt nature can give; as if beauty were merely the effect of the corruption of manners.—Reynolds, vol. i. Disc. 3. Note.

To this out-rigger the shrouds are fastened, and it is essentially necessary in trimming the boat when it blows fresh.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 18.

TRIMETER. Fr. Trimeter, versus tria metra seu tres mensuras habens; a verse having three measures or six (Iambic) feet.

This foot yet, in the famous trimeters
 Of Decius and Ennius, rare appeares.

TRINITARIAN. } pounded or composed of three.

In astrology,—a third portion of the zodiac. To trine,—to be or place in one of the trine angles.

I have a sone, and by the Trinitee
 It were me lever than twenty pound worth lond,
 Though it right now were fallen in my hond,
 He were a man of swiche discretion
 As that ye ben.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Prologue, v. 10,994.

Theologie is that science,
 Whiche vnto man yeueth euidence
 Of thyng, whiche is not bodily,
 Wherof men knowe redily
 The high Almighty Trinitee, Whiche is O God in vnitee,
 Withouten ende and begynnyng,
 And creature of all thinge.

Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

During the which there was an heavenly noise
 Heard sownd through all the pallace pleasantly
 Like as it had bene many an angels voice
 Singing before th' Eternall Maiesty,
 In their trinall triplicities on hye.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

This therefore is the very last ground his argument is to be resolved into. But how weak it is I have already intimated, it being not trinall dimension, but impenetrability, that constitutes a body.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 10.

— To the blanc moone

Her office they prescrib'd, to th' other five
 Their planetarie motions and aspects
 In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
 Of noxious efficacie, and when to joyne
 In synod unbenigne.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

That glorious form, that light unsufferable,
 And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
 Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council-table
 To sit the midst of Trinal Unity,
 He laid aside.—Id. On the Morning of Christ's Nativity.

S. Denis says, that the trine immersion signifies the Divine essence and beautitude of God in a trinity of persons.
 S. Athanasius says, it signifies the death, burial and resurrection of our blessed Saviour, together with his being three days in the grave.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

As to those who take trinity and tritheism for synonymous terms, they may go on to value themselves upon it.

Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 238.

Excuse the trinitarians for being reserved, after your example, in so tender a point; and for endeavouring to speak properly, as well as to think justly, in things pertaining unto God.—Id. Ib. p. 232.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
 And high rais'd Jove from his dark prison freed,
 Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
 Will gloriously the new-laid work succeed.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

For this advantage age from youth has won,
 As not to be outridden, though outrun.
 By Fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
 And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd.

Id. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

These cherubim were figures emblematical of the Trine persons in the Godhead—of the mystery of redemption by the Son's atonement—and of the subjection of all the powers of nature, and of all created things, animate and inanimate, to the incarnate God.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 30.

If the trinitarian be still farther urged to shew in what way this divine equality exists—how far it is an equality,— or, if not, what degrees exist of superiority or inferiority, he answers with St. Paul, that God was manifest in the flesh; but that without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness.—Gilpin. Ser. vol. ii. Hint 90.

TRINKET, n. } The Fr. Trinquet, It. Trin- TRINKETING. } chetto, from which Skinner derives our word, Cotgrave says—is properly “the top or top gallant, on any mast; the highest sail of the ship.” This nautical usage was familar to our old writers. (See the quotation from Hackluyt.) The Low Lat. has Trinquetum, or triquetum; Fr. Trictrac; in Eng. Tick-tack. The
 It. Trinci (Florio,) are cuts, jags, or snips in garments; various ornaments in garments: and in Mod. It. Trincio is a piece of stuff cut (trinciato) for ornament.

Trinket may have originally been applied to these small cuttings for ornaments—of any material —linen or metallic. And thence to—Any small pieces of ornament or decoration, of more ornament than use; toys, trifles; small play things; a strip of ornamented stuff—for a sail.

Beside this the same teachers with Christes doctrine mingled Jewishnes and superstitious philosophie, obseruing and keeping certain poyntes of the lawe, superstitiously also honouring the sunne, the moone, and starres, with such other small trinkettes of this world, bearing the Colossians in hand that thei were also bound to do the same.

Udal. Colossians, Argument.

But when the poorer sort of common souldiers haue euey man his leather bag or sachell well sown together, wherein he packs vp all his trinkets, and strongly trussing it vp hangs it at his horses tayle, and so passeth ouer.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 62.

And the farther we went, the more the winds increased, so that they put vs to great distresse, sayling alwayes with the sheates of our maine saile and trinket warily in our hands, and with great diligence we loosed the ties of all the sailes, to saue them the better, that the wind might not charge them too vehemently.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 422.

And suddenly with a great gust the trinket and the mizen were rent asunder.—Id. Ib. p. 411.

But I wold wit of the youth of the one, and beautilie of the other in vsyng all your luyes in vanitie, what goodly trinkets ye hope to weare in the straitnes of the sepulchre.

The Golden Boke, Let. 5.

To what would he on quail and pheasant swell,
That ev'n on tripe and carrion could rebel?

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel, pt. ii.

TRI-PERSONAL. Consisting of, constituted by three persons, (tres-personæ.)

One tri-personal Godhead! look upon this poor and almost spent and expiring church.

Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

The Arian and Socinian are charg'd to dispute against the Trinity; they affirm to believe the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, according to scripture and the apostolic creed; as for terms of trinity, trinitunity, co-essentiality, tripersonality and the like, they reject them as scholastic notions not to be found in scripture.—Id. Of True Religion.

TRI-PLA'SIAN. Gr. Τριπλαξ, τριπλασιος, triplex, three-fold.

Though both these names Oromasdes and Mithras, were frequently used by the Magi, for the το θειον, or whole Deity in general, yet this being triplasian or three-fold, according to their theology, as containing three hypostases in it; the first of those three seems to have been that, which was most properly called Oromasdes, and the second Mithras.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 289.

TRIPLET.

TRIPPLICATE.

TRIPPLICATION.

TRIPPLICITY.

Fr. Triple; It. Tripla; Sp. Triple; Lat. Triplex, (tres, three, and plicare, Gr. Πλειειν, to fold.) Three-fold. See TREBLE, and the quotation there from Fairefax.

Triplet,—three lines terminating in the same sound; sentences consisting of three members.

He drough Cerberus the hound of hel, by the triple chaines.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Their losse I can assure you did triple ours, as well in quality as in quantity.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 140.

At my coming unto Scarperii near unto Bonony, I did meet with Thadeus his courier; which brought certain expeditions triplicat; the one unto the prothonotary Gamba-bora, the other unto Gregory de Cassalis, and the third unto me.—Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. ii. No. 4.

He gave her gold and purple pall to weare,
And triple crowne set on her head full hye,
And her endowd with royall maiesty.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Such monster-tamers who would take in hand,
As have ty'd up the triple-headed hound,
Or of those giants which 'gainst Heaven durst stand,
Whose strength the gods it troubled to confound.

Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 4.

Those hierarchies that Jove's great will supply,
Whose orders formed in triplicity,
Holding their places by the treble trine,
Make up that holy theologic nine.

Id. The Man in the Moon.

And how the signs in their triplicities
By sympathising in their trine consents,
With whose inferior forming elements,
From which our bodies the complexions take,
Natures and number.

Id. Ib.

No sooner landed, in his den they found
The triple porter of the Stygian sound,
Grim Cerberus; who soon began to rear
His crested snakes, and arm'd his bristling hair.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. vi.

Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That even Corneille might with envy see
Th' alliance of his tripled unity.

Id. Epistle to Mr. Morteux.

I frequently make use of triplet rhymes, and for the same reason, because they bound the sense: and therefore I generally join these two licenses together, and make the last verse of the triplet a Pindaric.—Id. Ib. Ded.

Neither can the duplication of corporeal organs be ever able to advance that simple and stupid life of nature into redoubled consciousness or self-perception; nor any triplication, or indeed milleclupation of them, improve the same into real understanding.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 173.

As what receiveth motion in the seventh, to be perfected in the triplicities; that is, the time of conformation unto motion is double, and that from motion unto the birth, treble.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Their [Highland cattle] ordinary price, at present, is about three times greater than at the beginning of the century, and the rents of many highland estates have been tripled and quadrupled in the same time.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

They then retreated to the back part of the circle, as the women had done, and again advanced, on each side, in a triple row, till they formed a semicircle.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 5.

TRIPOD. Fr. Triped; It. Tripede; Sp. Tripies; Lat. Tripos; Gr. Τριπους, having three feet, (τρεῖς, ποδας.)

A three-footed stool.

Ile sweeten his affects againe, with presents infinite,
Which (to approve my firme intent) Ile openly recite,
Seven sacred tripods free from fire, ten talents of fine gold,
Twenty bright caldrons, twelve yong horse, well shapt, and well controld.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

This passion past, he gave command to his neare souldiers,
To put a tripod to the fire, to cleanse the festred gore
From off the person. They obeyd, and presently did powre
Fresh water in it; kindl'd wood, and with an instant flame,

The belly of the tripod girt till fires hot qualitie came Vp to the water.

Id. Ib. b. xviil.

I will not be affraid to affirm that this reason properly is the tripode or three-footed table, as one would say, and oracle of truth.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1102.

Scarce had I said; he shook the holy ground,
The laurels and the lofty hills around:
And from the tripos rush'd a bellowing sound.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. iii.

And first the gifts in public view they place,
Green laurel wreaths, and palm (the victor's grace)
Within the circle arms and tripods lie.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. v.

TRIPUDIARY. } It. Trepudiare; Lat. Tri-

ground. See TO TRIP.

On this foundation (non causa pro causa) were built the conclusions of soothsayers in their augurial and tripudary divinations; collecting presages from voice or food of birds, and conjoining events into causes of no connexion.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 4.

The soule of man, whether admonisht by sense, or left to her own liberty; whether in functions of the intellect, or of the affections and of the will, dances to the musicall aires of the cogitations, which is that tripudiation of the nymphs.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 13.

When Gracchus was slain, the same day the chickens refused to come out of the coop: and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like successes, when he contemned the tripudary augurations.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 11.

TRIEME. Lat. Treremis, tres remorum ordines. See the quotations.

Thucydides writeth, that Aminocles the Corinthian built the first trieme with three rows of oars to a side.

Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

Some indeed fancy a different original of these names, as that in the triemes, for example, either that there were three banks one after the other on a level, or three rowers sat upon one bank; or else three men tugged all together at one oar: but this is contrary, not only to the authority of the classicks, but to the figures of the triemes still appearing in ancient monuments.

Kennet. Antiquities of Rome, pt. ii. b. iv.

TRISAGION. Gr. Τρεῖς, three, and ἅγιος, holy. See the quotation.

Hereto agrees the seraphical hym, called the trisagion, Holy, holy, holy, &c. that used to be sung in all churches throughout the Christian world.

Bp. Bull. Works, vol. iii. p. 968.

TRIST. } Fr. Triste; It. Tristo; Sp.
TRISTFUL. } Triste; Lat. Tristis. See TRISTITIATE, v. } CONSTATE.
Sad, pensive, grieved, doleful.

A bitter sorrow by the heart him bit,
Amaz'd, asham'd, disgrac'd, sad, silent, trist,
Alone he would all day in darkness sit.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xlii. s. 29.

Heavens face doth glow;
Yea this solidity and compound masse,
With tristfull visage as against the doome,
Is thought-sicke at the act.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

Nor is there any, whom calamity doth so much tristitiate as that he never sees the flashes of some warming joy.

Feltham, pt. i. Res. 41.

TRISULC. } Fr. Trisulque; habens vel
TRISULCATE. } faciens, tres sulcos, having or

Swift has—A Tritical Essay on the Faculties of the Human Mind.

For the great men among the Greeks are taken much notice of, but for very ordinary and trite things in this science [astronomy].—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

The goodness of God is a frequented theme; to many perhaps it may seem vulgar and trite; so that discourse thereon, like a story often told, may be nauseous to their ears.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

Certain it is (though some lukewarm heads imagine they may be safe in temporizing between the extremes) that where there is not a tritalness or mediocrity in the thought, it can never be sunk into the genuine and perfect bathos, by the most elaborate low expression.

Pope. Martinus Scriblerus.

The deist indeed pretends that, in the things borrowed from Egypt, the first principles of law and morality, and the very trifest customs of civil life, are to be included.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 56.

Thus 'tis my fault perhaps if I complain
Of trite invention and a flimsy vein,
Tame characters, uninteresting, jejune,
And passions drily copied from Le Brun.

Armstrong. Taste.

The scarcity of sermons, which, while they preach the gospel to the poor, disgust not the fastidious ear of modern elegance by triteness or vulgarity, has long been a subject of regret and of complaint.—Wrangham, Ser. Pref.

TRI-THEISM. } Gr. Τριθεῖα, τριων, θεων,
TRITHEIST. } the doctrine, opinion, belief
TRITHEISTIC. } of three Gods.
TRITHEISTICAL.

There is nothing more in it than this, that Father and Son are not two Gods, because they are not both unoriginated: which is the common answer made by the Catholics to the charge of tritheism; not only before, but after the Nicene Council; as might be made appear by a cloud of witnesses, were it needful.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 11.

I do not pretend that you are tritheists, in every sense; but in the same sense that the Pagans are called polytheists, and in the Scripture-sense of the word God, as explained and contended for by yourselves.—Id. Ib. p. 238.

The main strength of the Doctor's cause lies, first, in his giving either a Sabellian or Tritheistic turn (admitting no medium) to the Catholic doctrine; and then charging it with confusion of persons, polytheism, nonsense, or contradiction.—Id. Ib. p. 215.

The tritheistical doctrine appears then to be as ancient as the ditheistical, that is, more ancient than our most ancient traditions.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 4. Authority in Matters of Religion.

TRITHING. Tertia pars provinciae, says Skinner. See Spelman in Thingus, thungrevius, and trithinga. Also the quotations.

When a county is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called trithings, which were anciently governed by a trithing-reeve.

Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd.

These trithings still subsist in the large county of York, where by an easy corruption they are denominated ridings; the north, the east, and the west-riding.—Id. Ib.

A place of common meeting.

Trivial,—common, as aught on the public ways, the high road; common, ordinary, of little price or value or estimation; worthless; trifling.

Trivial and trifle—bear a remarkable similarity in sound, and application.

But Weever now again to warn them doth begin
To leave these trivial toys, which inly he did hate,
That neither them besee'd, nor stood with his estate.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

Themison, a famous physician, set forth a whole booke of the hearbe waibread or plantain, wherein he highly praiseth it: and challengeth to himselfe the honour of first finding it out, notwithstanding it be a triviale and common hearbe, trodden under every man's foot.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxv.

How trivially common it is, that Luther was the sonne of an Incubus, the disciple of the divell, and that he who had been his master, proved his executioner?

Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. ii. § 10.

As for the pretended trivialness of the fifth and sixth day's work; I think it is apparent from what we have noted on the fifth day, that Moses his ranging of fish and fowl together is a consideration not vulgar and trivial, but philosophical.—More. Defence of the Philos. Cabbala, App.

Profiting in trivials to a miracle, especially in poetry (in which he [Heylin] gave several ingenious specimens as occasion offer'd) was in the year 1613 plac'd by his father in Hart Hall, under the tuition successively of two tutors.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

But I have already wearied myself, and doubt not but I have tir'd your lordship's patience, with this long, rambling, and I fear trivial discourse.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

Great ingenuity, though injudiciously and trivially employed, will ever excite the curiosity of readers who love to observe the operation of the human faculties under the influence of the various modes of judging and writing, which, at different periods, have prevailed in the world of letters.—*Knox. The spoiles of princes hang'd which were in battel won.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Their swords and spears were broke, and hauberges rent,
And their proud girlonds of triumphant bayes
Troden in dust with fury insolent,
To show the victors might and merciless intent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

The good soul armed, not with the unmeet and cumbersome harness of flesh and blood, but with the sure (though invisible) armour of God, dares come forth to meet him [Death]; and in the name of the Lord of Hosts, both bids him battle, and foils him in the combat; and now having laid him on the ground, can triumphingly say, O Death, where is thy sting?—Bp. Hall. Of Contentation, s. 17.

—Who scorning worldly loss

Whereon our Saviour dy'd; which found, as it was sought,
From Salem unto Rome triumphantly she brought.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 8.

Prone on the field the bleeding warrior lies,
While thus, triumphing, stern Achilles cries.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

I, first of Romans, shall in triumph come
From conquer'd Greece, and bring her trophies home:
With foreign spoils adorn my native place;
And with Idume's palms my Mantua grace.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

Let vulgar souls triumphal arches raise,
Or speaking marbles, to record their praise.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, Conc.

Old Rome from such a race deriv'd her birth,
(The seat of empire, and the conquer'd Earth;)
Which now on seven high hills triumphant reigns,
And in that compass all the world contains.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

So fought each host with thirst of glory fir'd,
And crowds on crowds triumphantly expir'd.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

But it [the splendour of Rubens] resembles eloquence, which bears down every thing before it, and often triumphs

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

TRIUMVIR. } Lat. Triumvir.

TRIUMVIRATE. } One man of three (trium viro-rum) sc. who were appointed to, or who assumed, power in the state.

The image likewise of Apollo (which after that Antonius
the triumvir had wrongfully taken from the Ephesians, Augustus Cæsar restored againe unto them, being warned so to doe by a vision appearing unto him in his sleepe) was of Myro his making.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 8.

With these the Piercies them confederate,
And as three heads conjoin in one intent;
And instituting a triumvirate,
Do part the land in triple government.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

To forbid men to complain, when they suffer, would be an instance of tyranny but one degree below that which the triumvirs gave, during the slaughter and terror of the proscriptions when by edict they commanded all men to be merry upon pain of death.

Bolingbroke. Remarks on the Hist. of England, Let. 1.

TRI-UNE. } Formed of the Lat. Tres, three,

The Arian and Socinian are charg'd to dispute against the Trinity: they affirm to believe the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost according to scripture and the apostolic creed; as for terms of trinity, triniunity, coessentiality, tripersonality and the like, they reject them as scholastic notions, not to be found in scripture.—Milton. Of True Religion.

Where will they be able to fix their greedy eyes with comparably that pleasure and delight, as upon the mysterious tri-une divinity, which is the Eternal Author of all being, the Root of all good, and the Rule and Source of all perfection?—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 1.

Can there be harm in adoring power in God the Father, wisdom in God the Son, goodness in God the Holy Ghost;
power, wisdom, and goodness combined in the triune Deity, equally the objects of love and reverence to man, whether acting conjunctly or separately in his creation, his redemp-

Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

As the trochaic measure was still occasionally admitted, even in the improved and serious Greek Tragedy, and, in particular, occurs very frequently in the tragedies of Euripides, it is natural to suppose, that a still more frequent use of it would be one of the characteristics of the satyric drama, which seems to be only a sort of revival, in an improved and regular form, of the old trochaic tragedy with its chorus of dancing satyrs.

Where beaux and belles in parties meet;
Where gilded chairs and coaches throng,
And jostle as they trowl along.

Swift. Dan Smedley's Petition.

Cheerful at morn, he wakes from short repose,
Breathes the keen air, and carols as he goes;
With patient angle trolls the finny deep,
Or drives his vent'rous ploughshare to the steep.

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

TROLLOP. } Fr. Troller, "to trowle, to TROLLOPE'E. } range." Trollerie, a trowling, a disordered ranging, (Cotgrave.) See TROLL.
And hence Trollop—

One who goes, strols (drawls) about, from place to place, carelessly, loosely dressed.
Trollopee,—a loose dress.

For does it not argue rather the lascivious promptness of his own fancy, who from the harmless mention of a sleek-stone could neigh out the remembrance of his old conversation among the Viraginian trollops?

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I haue knowne to goe about with troll-my-dames.—Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 2.

Let him, in part, be made your pattern,
Whose muse, now queen, and now a slattern,
Trick'd out in Rosciad rules the roast,
Turns trapes and trollop in the ghost.

Lloyd. The Crier of Cripplegate's Letter.

At once in bright procession spied,
The female world was at my side,
Mingled, like many-colour'd patterns,
Nymphs, mesdames, trollops, belles, and slatterns.

Brooke. The Temple of Hymen.

There goes Mrs. Roundabout. I mean the fat lady in the lustering trollopee. Between you and I, she is but a cutler's wife.—Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

TROOP, n. } Fr. Troupe; It. Truppa;

R. Brunne writes it Trip. A trip of goats, sheep, &c. will be a drove, a number driven together, (see Jamieson), brought together. And a troop—

A number led or brought together; led or conducted in a collected number; in a company.
To troop—

To move, to march in company; in a body; to move, to march.

Methought kyng Phillip inough was disconfit
When he & alle his trip for nouht fled so tite.

R. Brunne, p. 203.

Moreouer, when he will make his progresse from one country to another, hee hath foure troupes of horsemen, one being appointed to goe a dayes journey before, and another to come a dayes journey after him, the third to march on his right hand, and the fourth on his left, in the maner of a crosse, he himselfe being in the midst, and so euery particular troupe haue their daily iourneys limited vnto them, to the ende they may prouide sufficient victuals without defect.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 62.

They being trooped together in their order, and a general salutation being made, there was presently a generall silence.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 441.

The whych thyng when Cesar hard of, deuinding hys horsemen likewyse into thre troopes, he comaunded the to pro-cede agaynst theyr enemies.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 221.

The said king by his writs, caused proclamation to be made throughout the whole kingdom, that he had caused his uncle the duke of Gloucester, and the earls of Arundel and Warwick, to be taken and arrested, not for any assemblings or troopings by them formerly made within the kingdom of England, but for very many extortions, oppressions, and other things by them afterwards done, and perpetrated, against his royalty, and kingly majesty.

State Trials. Hen. IV. an. 1399. Rich. II.

O, gently come into my feeble brest,
Come gently; but not with that mightie rage,
Wherewith the martial troupes thou doest infest,
And hartes of great heroes doest enrage,
That nought their kindled corage may aswage.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Then back she stands; and then desires, as fain
Again to look, to see if he were near.
At length a glitt'ring troop far off she spies;
Perceives the throng, and hears the shouts and cries.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

But for that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grissly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron.—Milton. Comus.

So, when the sun in bed,
Curtain'd with cloudy red,
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The flocking shadows pale
Troop to the infernal jail.
Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave.
Id. On the Morning of Christ's Nativity.

So have I known a bold trooper fight in the confusion of a battle, and being warm with heat and rage, received, from the swords of his enemy, wounds open like a grave; but he felt them not.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 19.

Nor, while they pick them up with busy bill,
The little trooping birds unwisely scares.
Thomson. Spring.

Before the merry troop the minstrels play'd;
All in their master's liveries were array'd,
And clad in green, and on their temples wore
The chaplets white and red their ladies bore.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Two of these [seals skins] being fastned together, a man sets a-stride them, having one before and the other behind him; and so sits firmer than in a trooper's saddle.
Dampier. Voyages. Discourse of Winds, c. 4

Now from the roost, or from the neighb'ring pale,
Where, diligent to catch the first faint gleam
Of smiling day, they gossip'd side by side,
Come trooping at the house-wife's well-known call
The feather'd tribes domestic.—Cowper. Task, b. v.

TROPOLO'GICALLY. } τρέπ-ειν, to turn.
TROPO'LOGIZE, v. } A trope,—a turn, a change, a metaphor.

Tropology,—speech or writing in tropes, changes,
(e.g. of literal meaning,) in metaphor.

A troick,—whence the sun appears to turn or return.

This signe of Cancer is cleped the tropike of sommer, of tropos, that is to saine, ayenward.
Chaucer. The Astrolabie, Conc.

To that we say yt if it wer but a bare woord spoken, it might be taken for an allegory or sõe other trope or common

To answer this doubt, reason perswadeth, the hottest place in the world to bee vnder and about the two tropicks; for there more then in any other place doe both the causes of heate concur, that is, the perpendicular falling of the sunne beames, at right angles, and a greater continuance of the sunne aboue the horizon, the pole there being eleuated three or foure and twentie degrees.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 53.

They deuide the scripture in to foure senses, the littoral, tropological, allegorical and anagogical.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 166.

Tropological and anagogical are termes of their own fayning and all together vnnecessary.—Id. Ib.

If this sence of those words does avoid a trope, it brings in a distinct proposition; if it be spoken properly, it is more distant from giving authority to their new doctrine.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 7.

But we by the real spiritual presence of Christ do understand Christ to be present, as the spirit of God is present in the hearts of the faithful by blessing and grace, and this is all which we mean besides the tropical and figurative presence.—Id. Ib. § 1.

Liberty from sin, or christian liberty in this sence, is nothing but a tropical expression, a metaphor and similitude, and therefore is not that real privilege by which we were materially advantag'd upon the publication of the gospel of Christ.—Id. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

But Bellarmine adds, that if you will not allow him to say so, then he grants it in plain terms, that Christ's body is chewed, is attrite or broken with the teeth, and that not tropically but properly, which is the crass doctrine which Christ reproved in the men of Capernaum.
Id. Of the Real Presence, § 3.

But if by a transition from rhetoric to logick, he shall contend, it hath no such part or humour; he committeth an open fallacy, and such as was probably committed concerning Spanish mares; whose swiftness tropically expressed from their generation by the wind; might after be grossly taken, and a real truth conceived in that conception.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 3.

For not attaining the deuterscopy, and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherencies, figures, or tropologies.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 3.

If Athena or Minerva be tropologized into prudence, then let the pagans shew what substantial essence it hath, or that it really subsists according to this tropology.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 520.

In many cases the first literal sence is the hardest, and sometimes impossible, and sometimes inconvenient; and when it is any of these, although we are not to recede from the literal sence; yet we are to take the second signification, the tropological or figurative.
Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

This was the general opinion concerning the Greekish fables, that some of them were physically, and some tropo- logically allegorical.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 512.

If it be granted that by Athena or Minerva, be tropologi- cally meant prudence, &c.—Id. Ib. p. 519.

For since on every sea, on every coast,
Your men have been distress'd, your navy toss'd,
Seven times the sun has either tropic view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. i.

Many reasons may be assign'd for this, beside the accidental ones from the make of the particular countries, tropi- cally winds or the like.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

Such a kind of exercise I take many of those allegorical comments, (those especially of the tropological kind) to have been.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 312.

The law about the Sabbath, for instance, may be supposed (over and above the literal meaning) prophetically to signify Christ's rest in the grave; tropologically to denote the rest of the soul, and its cessation from sin; and anagogically to prefigure the eternal rest of the saints.—Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 15.

But divines, by their arbitrary power over their Scriptures, make it to signify the Messiah allegorically, and tropologi- cally or anagogically the inward light of grace, or the outward splendour of celestial glory.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 4. Authority in Matters of Religion.

Figures of words are commonly called tropes, and consist in a word's being employed to signify something that is different from its original and primitive; so that if you alter the word, you destroy the figure.—Blair, Lect. 44.

His appearance was more formidable than that of the other, for he wore a large cap made of the tail feathers of the tropic bird, and his body was covered with stripes of different coloured cloth, yellow, red, and brown.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 20.

TROPHY. } Fr. Trophée; It. Trofeo; Sp.
TRO'PHIED. } Trofeo; Lat. Tropæum; Gr. Τρο- παιον, from τροπή, a turning, (sc. in flight,) from τρέπ-ειν, to turn.

A sign or signal (sc.) that the enemy has turned their backs, has fled; a monument of victory. See the quotation from Potter.

And every reame went he for to see,
He was so strong that no man might him let;
As bothe the worldes endes, saith trophee,
In stede of boundes he a pillar set.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14, 121.

"Then since within this wide great universe
Nothing doth firme and permanent appeare,
But all things tost and turned by tranverse;
What then should let, but I aloft should reare
My trophee, and from all the triumph beare?"
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Of Mutabilitie, c. 7.

From whose stone trophied head, it on to Wendross went,
Which tow'rds the sea again, resounded it to Dent.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 30.

The manner of adorning trophies, was hanging up all sorts of arms taken from the enemy, according to Euripides
All sorts of arms, that from the foe he took,
He hung about the trophy which he rais'd.
Potter. Antiquities, b. iii. c. 12.

Seek the known name our Fasti us'd to wear,
The noble mark of many a glorious year;
The name that wont the trophy'd arch to grace,
And e'en the temples of the gods found place.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

He who bears up with an undaunted spirit against them, while so many are dejected by them, erects on his very many misfortunes a trophy to his honour.
Bolingbroke. Reflections upon Exile.

"For know, I trod the trophy'd paths of power;
Felt every joy that fair ambition brings;
And left the lonely roof of yonder bower,
To stand beneath the canopies of kings."
Shenstone, Elegy 7.

TROT, v. } Fr. Trotter, trot; It. Trottare, TROT, n. } tròtto; Sp. Trotar, trote; Ger.
TROTTER. } Trotten. The Dut. Trotten; also written torden, (Kilian;) and torden is terden, tred-en, to tread. So that the trot of a horse (technically described by Berenger) is the tread;
A. S. Tred-an, (see Somner.) Skinner resorts to the Lat. Torquere. See also Wachter in vv.
trotten and trot; and Menage, who wander afar for that which Somner could see at hand.

To tread, to trample; to tread about, move about, run with a quick, short, or high motion of the foot.

An old trot,—(sc. trate,)—one who moves about, backwards and forwards, busily, officiously; one who has moved or *trod*den about much. Illa gratum studio celerabat anili,—she hyit furth with slaw pase lik ane trat, (G. Douglas;) and see the quotation from Surrey.

Al be it so, that no man finden shal
Non in this world, that *trotte*th hol in al,
Ne man, ne beste, swiche as men can devise.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9411.

Neither yet durst I complaine, although he trotted full sore.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 112.

When she had said, redouble gan her nurse,
Her steppes, forth on an aged woman's trot.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Put case an aged trot be somewhat tough?
If coyne shee bring the care will be the lesse,
If shee haue store of much and goodes ynough
Thou needste not force so much of handsomnesse.
Turberville. The Aunsweare for taking a Wyfe.

And he also [was] verie wearie of his trotting and wandering on foot amongst bogs, woods, and desert places.
Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1583.

—There's no living thus,
Nor am I able to endure it longer,
With all the helps and heats that can be given me,
I am at my trot already.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Custom of the Country, Act iv.

Eurimidon then rein'd his horse, that trotted neighing by.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

One hires a Friezeland trotter, halfe yard deepe,
To drag his tumbrell through the staring Cheape.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 4.

She now the trotting calf address'd,
To save from death a child distress'd.—Gay, Fable 1.

It is good, on some occasions, to think beforehand as little as we can; to enjoy as much of the present as will not endanger our futurity, and to provide ourselves with the virtuoso's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot.
Dryden. Virgil. Past. Ep. to Ld. Clifford.

When a horse trots, his legs are in this position, two in the air, and two upon the ground, at the same time crosswise; that is to say, the near-foot before, and the off-foot behind, are off the ground, and the other two upon it, and so alternately of the other two.
Berenger. Hist. & Art of Horsemanship, vol. ii. c. 4.

All writers, both ancient and modern, have constantly asserted the trot to be the foundation of every lesson you can teach a horse.—Id. Ib.

TROTH. } Otherwise written truth, the TROTH-LESS. } third pers. sing. of the verb to throw, (qv.)

That which any one throweth, plighteth to be true; or trusty, or faithful; truth, veracity, faith, fidelity, fealty.

Togeder han thise three hir trouthes plight
To live and dien eche of hem for other,
As though he were his owen boren brother.
Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12, 637.

Amint. I hate mine as much,
This 'tis to break a troth; I should be glad
If all this tide of grief would make me mad.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act iii.

As when a troupe of iolly saylers row
Some new found land and countrie to descrie,
Through dang'rous seas and vnder stars vnknow,
Thrall to the faithlesse waues, and trothlesse skie,
If once the wished shore begin to shew,
They all salute it with a ioyfull crie.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. iii. s. 4.

Sir Knights (quoth he) if you intend to ride,
And follow each report fond people say,
You follow but a rash and trothlesse guide,
That leades vain men amisse, and makes them stray.
Id. Ib. b. xiv. s. 30.

— [My wife] deserves a name
As ranke as any flax-wench, that puts to Before her troth-plight.
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

— This your son-in-law,
And sonne unto the king, who heuens directing
Is troth-plight to your daughter.—Id. Ib. Act v. sc. 3.

Bar. It is certaine corporall, that he is married to Nell Quickly, and certainly she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.—Id. Hen. V. Act ii. sc. 1.

But first I swore him on his knightly troth,
(And here demand performance of his oath)
To grant the boon that next I should desire;
He gave his faith, and I expect my hire.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

TROUBLE, v. Fr. Troubler, from tur-
TROUBLE, n. bulare, which Menage TROUBLEABLE. forms from the Lat. Tur- TROUBLER, n. bula, a little crowd, (tur- TROUBLESOME. ba.) Wachter derives TROUBLESOMELY. the Ger. Truben, tribu-TROUBLESOMENESS. lieren, and the A. S.
TROUBLOUS. Trifel-an, (see TRAVAIL), TROUBLOUSLY. from the Lat. Tribulare.
TROUBLENESS. Tooke considers the A. S.
TROUBLING, n. Tribul-an (otherwise written trifel-an) to be the root of the Latin.

To vex, to afflict, to distress, to harass, to perplex, to molest; to be or cause to be anxious;
to disquiet, to disorder, to agitate.

But Kyng Eroude herde and was troubled.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 2.

Now my soule is troubled, & what schal I seye? Fadir, sauue me fro this our.—Id. Jon, c. 12.

Nowe is my soule troubled, and what shall I saye? Father, delyuer me from this houre.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Than is accidie [or slouth] the anguish of a trouble herte.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The second spice of glotonie is, that the spirit of a man wexeth all trouble for dronkenesse, and bereveth a man the discretion of his wit.—Id. Ib.

He is like to an hors that seketh rather to drink drovy or troubled water, than for to drinke water of the clere well.
Id. Ib.

Alas, that evir our hertis should depart atoo!
For in your graciose dayis, of hert, is troubilnes
I had nevir knowlech, but of all gladness.

Id. The Marchantes Second Tale.

"As much as through his grete might,
Be it of heate or of light,
The sunne surmounteth the moone,
That troubler is, and chaungeth soone."

Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And troubleable ire, that araiseth in hem the flode of trou- blings, tourmenteth on that other side.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

"Suster, I have right great pitle
Of your annoy, and of the troubulous tene,
Wherein ye and your company haue bene
So long alas."

Id. The Flower and the Leaf.

And if myne hap were so well went,
That for the hole I might haue halfe,
Me thinketh I were a goddesse halfe.
From where Vsure wolde haue double,
My conscience is not so trouble.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

I am but a poore man, of a lowe degree, troubled and beaten vnder fote, not eloquent.—Udal. Corinthians, c. 12.

Our people greatly reioyced of their great good happe to haue escaped so many hard euents, troubles and miseries, as they did in that voyage, and had great cause therefore to praise the Almighty, who had so mercifully preserved and deliuered them.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 430.

This night after supper, by reason of a certaine Hollander that was drunke, there arose in the ship such a troublesome disturbance, that all the ship was in an uproar with weapons.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 111.

But Jesus [was] offended with this importunitie and troublesomnes.—Id. Matthew, c. 12.

The trouble cares in marriage, as are the necessarye prouisions for howse keepynge, the vertuous bryngynge vp of children, and the daylye helpynge of pouertie, shulde rather seme a christen crosse to godly wyse men, than easie idelnesse in monkerye.
Bale. English Volaries, pt. i. fol. 69.

In stede of circumcision, cutte out of thy mynde superfluous and vnsemyng desyres. In stede of keepynge the sabboth, kepe thy minde quiet from troubulous desyres.

Udal. Romaines, c. 12.

And what, that to be troubulously vexed with the care of suche thinges is a poinct not only of mistrustfulness towards God, but also a poinct of folie?—Id. Luke, c. 12.

— My womans strength
Is so orecharg'd with danger like to grow
About my marriage, that these under-things
Dare not abide in such a troubled sea.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act i.

— How have ye troubld all mankind
With shews instead, meer shews of seeming pure,
And banisht from mans life his happiest life
Simplicite and spotless innocence.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

But were it not that Time their troubler is,
All that in this delightfull gardin growes
Should happy bee, and haue immortal blis.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

Whom broad awake she findes, in troubulous fitt,
Fore-casting, how his foe he might annoy.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 4.

It fortun'd, forth faring on his way,
He saw from far, or seemed for to see,
Some troubulous uprore or contentious fray,
Whereto he drew in hast it to agree.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 4.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesomeness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first.—Bacon.

— And thus prepar'd
Secure to die, the fatal message heard:
Then smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look,
Or trembling hand, the funeral present took:
Ev'n kept her countenance, when the lid remov'd
Disclod'd the heart, unfortunately lov'd.
Dryden. Sigismunda & Guiscardo.

Two troublesome mischiefs therefore wisdom frees us from, the company of anxious doubt in our actions, and the consequence of bitter repentance; for no man can doubt of what he is sure, nor repent of what he knows good.
Barrow, voi. i. Ser. 1.

Men will not be so importunately dull, as not to understand what others say, without demanding an explication of their terms; nor so troublesomely critical, as to correct others in the use of the words they receive from them.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 10.

The scene then chang'd, from this romantic land,
To a bleak waste by bound'ry unconfin'd,
Where three swart sisters of the weird band
Were mutt'ring curses to the troubulous wind.
Cooper. The Tomb of Shakespeare.

We found walking here exceedingly troublesome, for the ground was covered with a kind of grass, the seeds of which were very sharp and bearded backwards.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 2.

TROVER. Fr. Trouver; It. Trovare; Ger.
Treffen; Dut. Treffen, tangere, attingere, and, consequentially, invenire, to touch, to touch upon,
to find.

"Now, whether I should beforehand, Swear he robbed me?"—"I understand."
"Or bring my action of conversion
And trover for my goods?"
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

This action of trover and conversion was in its original an action of trespass upon the case, for recovery of damages against such person as had found another's goods, and refused to deliver them on demand, but converted them to his own use: from which finding and converting it is called an action of trover and conversion.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 9.

In which he milkt.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

Danaus was the first that sailed with a ship, and so hee passed the seas from Egypt to Greece: for before that time they used but troughs or flat planks, devised by king Erythra to crosse from one iland to another in the red sea.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

Some log perhaps upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which, rudely cut within,
And hollow'd first, a floating trough became,
And cross some rivulet passage did begin.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

It now imports beneath what sign thy hoes
The deep trough sink, and ridge alternate raise.
Grainger. The Sugar-Cane, b. i.

TROUNCE, v. Skinner derives from the Fr.
Tronçon, a truncheon; q. d. to beat with a trun-cheon or club. It may be from the Fr. Troncir, to cut; to cut with a lash.

To lash; generally, to beat; to punish.

But the Lorde trounsed Sisara and all his charettes, and all hys hoste with the edge of ye swerde, before Barah.
Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 4.

No court allows those partial interlopers
Of Law and Equity, two single paupers,
T' encounter hand to hand at bars, and trounce
Each other gratis in a suit at once.

Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

I would it were my case, I'd give More than I'll say, or you'll believe:
I would so trounce her, and her purse,
I'd make her kneel for better or worse.

Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

Dom. Nay if you talk of peaching, I'll peach first, and see TROW, v. Trow. A. S. Treow-ian;

TRUE. Goth. Traw-an. Lye,—True,
TRU'AGE. verus, fidus. Truth, veritas, TRU'AGER. fides; Junius,—who merely tells TRU'EFAST. that Mer. Casaubon derives from TRU'ELY. Gr. Ἀρεκῆς, verus, ἀρεκεία, ve-TRU'ENESS. ritas. Lye adds,—from A. S.
TRU'ISM. Treowa, truwa, trywe, fidus,
TROTH, or verus. Treowtha, trywth, veritas.
TRUTH. All from the Goth. Trawan, TRU'THFUL. confidere. Skinner also traces TRU'THLESS. true and truth to the A. S. verb

Truw-ian, and pronounces Casaubon, impavidus.
Wachter affirms the A. S. and Goth. with the Dut. Trow, trowen, Ger. Trew, fidus; trewe, fide-litas, fiducia; Sw. Tro, from the verb, traw-en, credere, confidere, to believe, to confide—to be all from the Gr. ῥωπ-ειν, confidere. Ihre agrees with neither Casaubon nor Wachter, but proposes nothing himself. See now Tooke, vol. ii. p. 401.

To trow,—to think, to have thoughts, ideas;
to believe firmly; to be thoroughly persuaded;
to be convinced of.

True, anciently written trew (the regular past part. of trow, as grew of grow, knew of know), means—

Trowed, thought, believed firmly; agreeable to, conformable to or consistent with truth, with our thoughts or belief: faithful, veracious; real.

Truth (formerly written Troweth, trowth, trouth and troth), is the third pers. sing. of the verb to trow, and means—

Any thing which any one troweth; thinketh, firmly believeth, is thoroughly persuaded or convinced of; belief, faith, fidelity, verity, veracity, reality. And further, with more latitude, it is applied to—fidelity to laws, rules, promises, engagements; to—honour, honesty, integrity, virtue, loyalty, chastity, &c. &c. See TO TRUST, and TREE. See VERY, and the quotations from Locke; also the quotation from Hobbs, in v. Belime.

Troth,—see TROTH, n. and BETROTH.

Piers Plouhman uses (to us) the extraordinary expression,—“Many a false truth,”—Arrews feathered with fair byheste (that is, promise), and many a false truth (i. e. deceitful thought, or meaning.)

Truenesse of being, and outward visibility, are no praise to her; yea, these are aggravations to her falshood.
Bp. Hall. The Reconciler.

I am desired to declare freely what I think concerning the truenesse and visibilitie of the present Roman church, as it is by your lordship explicated.—Id. Ib.

The very essence of truth is plainness and brightness:
the darkness and crookedness is our own. The wisdom of God created understanding, fit and proportionable to truth, the object and end of it, as the eye to the thing visible.
If our understanding have a film of ignorance over it or be blear with gazing in other false glistenings; what is that to truth.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Lu. Well, I have liv'd in ignorance; the ancients

Dryden. Secret Love, Act iv.

Those propositions are true, which express things as they are: or, truth is the conformity of those words or signs, by which things are exprest, to the things themselves.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 1.

The title of this chapter [is] a truism.
Swift. Remarks upon a Book, c. 7.

TRU

Allow a man the privilege to make his own definitions of common words, and it will be no hard matter for him to infer conclusions, which in one sense shall be true and in another false, at once seeming Paradoxes and manifest truisms.—Berkeley. Minute Philosopher, Dial. 7.

Though truth and falshood, belong, in propriety of speech, only to propositions; yet ideas are oftentimes termed true or false, (as what words are there, that are not used with great latitude, and with some deviation from their strict and proper significations.)—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 31.

Our ideas, being nothing but bare appearances or perceptions in our minds, cannot properly and simply in themselves be said to be true or false, no more than a single name of any thing can be said to be true or false.—Id. Ib.

Truth or falshood, lying always in some affirmation, or negation, mental or verbal, our ideas are not capable any of them of being false, till the mind passes some judgment on them; that is, affirms or denies something of them.
Id. Ib.

Truth, whether in or out of fashion, is the measure of knowledge, and the business of the understanding; whatsoever is besides that, however authorised by consent, or recommended by rarity, is nothing but ignorance, or something worse.—Id. Conduct of the Understanding, § 24.

All truth, of what kind soever it be, is real.

Clarke, Ser. 41.

I might have said more explicitly: "That I account that to be truth, which the constitution of human nature determines man to believe, and that to be falshood which the constitution of human nature determines man to disbelieve."
Beattie. On Truth, pt. i. c. 1. Note.

Truth supposes mankind: for whom and by whom alone the word is formed, and to whom only it is applicable. If no man, no truth.—Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 5.

TROWEL. Fr. Truelle; Dut. Trouweel, tru-weel, from the Lat. Trulla, a dim. of trua, a ladle, (Menage, Skinner, and Lye.) Against these authorities the Dut. Troll-en, to turn or move around or about, may still be suggested.

But, alas, most mean are their monuments, made of plaster, wrought with a trowell.
Fuller. Worthies. Durham.

No, they could not have the honour of a generall dismission, but each man leaves his trowel and station, more like a foolle then hee undertooke it: so commonly actions begun in glory, shut up in shame.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Of Babel.

Decker and others, who were, at the very moment, pledging their future labours for the magnificent loan of "five shillings," or writing "penny books" in spunging houses, are high in mirth at the expense of the "bricklayer," and ring the changes on the "hod and trowel," the "lime and mortar poet," very successfully, and, apparently, very much to their own satisfaction.—Gifford. Memoirs of B. Jonson.

A dress or clothing for the lower limbs; perhaps so called from their being tied, girt, or laced tight, buttoned fast; to distinguish them from a former or other dress. See the commentators on Shakespeare.

side, with a waistband fitted to the upper part of it.—Id. Ib.

Orellana and his companions, under cover of the night, having prepared their weapons, and thrown off their trousers and the more cumbersome part of their dress, came all together on the quarter-deck, and drew towards the door of the great cabin.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 3.

Judging that we should soon come into cold weather, I ordered slops to be served to such as were in want; and gave to each man the fearnought jacket and trowzers allowed them by the admiralty.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 2.

Trouwant, a vagabond, a deceiver. Skinner suggests the A.S. Thurh, thorough, and wendan, to wend or go,—to wend or wander through. May it not be from Fr. Trouvant, trouver, to find, to invent, to contrive, to devise; and hence, invent tricks, excuses, pretences? A truant.—

One who invents excuses (for industry); who neglects or omits under false pretences; and, generally, an idler, a loiterer, a lazy loitering fellow.

In Fr. and in Old Eng.—one who begs (under false pretences, pretences of his own finding or invention).

"Saint Poule that loved all holy church,

And loath their empty hives, and idly stray,
Restrain the wanton fugitives, and take
A timely care to bring the truants back.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

But, when thou seest a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or crouch'd upon the plain;
Or listlessly to crop the tender grass;
Or late to lag behind, with truant pace;
Revenge the crime, and take the traitor's head,
Ere in the faultless flock the dire contagion spread.

TRUCE. } Fr. Trèves; It. Tregua; Sp. Tregua, from the Ger. Trew, faith; because it is a faith given for a time to the enemy, (Skinner.) See Treuga, in Wachter. Truce, or trewes, is the regular past tense of the A.S. verb Trywsian, to pledge one's faith, to plight one's troth, (Tooke;) sc. to forbear from acts of hostility.

A plight or pledge—to cease, or forbear, or suspend hostility: and hence, applied to—

A suspension, cessation, interruption, intermission, forbearance.

He suor he wolde awreke be of this vil trespas.

For 'tis said he had none of his own.

Brome. The new Knight Errant.

If such divine ministeries as these, wherein the angel of the church represents the person of Christ Jesus, must lie prostitute to sordid fees, and not pass to and fro between our Saviour that of free grace redeem'd us, and the submissive penitent without the truccage of perishing coin, and the butcherly execution of tormentors, rooks and rakeshames sold to lucre, then have the Babylonish merchants of souls just excuse.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

First that he lie upon the truckle-bed,
Whiles his yong maister lieth ore his hed.

Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 6.

They rowed up about 100 leagues before they came to any settlement, and then found some Spaniards, who lived there to truck with the Indians for gold.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

Now tell me Stoick
If all these with a wish might be made thine,
Would'st thou not truck thy ragged virtue for 'em?

Dryden. Secret Love, Act v.

So that of all the courses which man in such a case can take, this of capitulating, and (as it were) making terms with the devil, is the most senseless and dangerous; no man having yet driven a saving bargain with this great trucker for souls, by exchanging guilts, or bartering one sin for another.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 9.

But the greatest point of all wherein the bishop of Winton shewed his zeal to the pope and popery, appeared in his furious prosecution to blood, of all such as would not, or could not, truckle to it.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1555. c. 35.

He that is beaten may be said
To lie in Honour's truckle-bed.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

But first with knocking loud, and bawling,
He rous'd the squire, in truckle lolling.—Id. pt. ii. c. 2.

Liv'd with men infamous and vile,
Truck'd his salvation for a smile,
To catch their humour caught their plan,
And laugh'd at God to laugh with man.

Churchill. The Duellist, b. iii.

It is the necessary, though very slow and gradual, consequence of a certain propensity in human nature, which has in view no such extensive utility; the propensity to truck, barter, and exchange one thing for another.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 2.

I cannot truckle to a fool of state,
Nor take a favour from the man I hate.

Churchill. Epis. to W. Hogarth.

I venture to say, it did so happen, that persons had a single office divided between them, who had never spoke to each other in their lives; until they found themselves, they knew not how, pigging together, heads and points, in the same truckle-bed.—Burke. Speech on American Taxation.

TRUCULENT. } Fr. Truculent;—truculent, TRUCULENCY. } cruel, threatful of countenance, terribly looking, (Cotgrave.) Lat. Tru- culentus, from Trux; Gr. Τρυχ-ειν, atterere, affligere, to bruise to pieces; and hence—Savage, barbarous, terrific.

The trembling boy his brethren's hands,
Their truculent aspects, and servile bands,
Beheld.—Sandys. Christ's Passion, (1649.)

Pestilential seminaries, according to their grossness or subtlety, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enecate in two hours.

Harvey. On the Plague.

For their head and leader they had Claudius Sanctus, one bereft of an eye, in his countenance hideous and truculent, in his faculties still more defective and impotent.

He loves not tyranny:—the truculency of the subject, who transacts this, he approves not.

Waterhouse. On Fontescu, (1663,) p. 184.

TRUDGE. It. Truccare, to trudge, to skud, to pack away, (Florio.) And Skinner derives from the Italian, or from To trot: perhaps more immediately from tread, in Goth. Trud-an.—

To move or keep upon the tread or trot; to keep on, get on, keep (the feet) in motion.

And lete them trudge hence apace, tyll they come to theyr maister of myschief.—Bale. Apologie, fol. 6.

Thus tale once tolde none other speech preuaylde,
But packe and trudge, al leysure was to long.

Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

And now my lord, declare your noble mynde,
Was this a Pylot, or a Pilate iudge?
Or rather was he not of Judas kynde;
Which left vs thus and close away could trudge?

Id. Voyage into Hollande, an. 1572.

They enquire how many beeves or oxen of his died? or what quantity of wine sowred under his hand? and no sooner are they full of these news, but into the city they trudge and make haste again.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 114.

He that will know the truth of things, must leave the common and beaten track, which none but weak and servile minds are satisfied to trudge along continually in.

Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 24.

Not one of them was observed to stop and look towards us, but they trudged along, to all appearance without the least emotion, either of curiosity or surprize.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 2.

TRULL. From the It. Trulla, a dirty woman, (Skinner.) A.S. Thyrel, thyrl, foramen, a hole bored or pierced, (Somner.) The past part. of the A.S. Thyrl-ian, perforare, means — aliquid perforatum: by the common transposition of r, is the Eng. Throll, thrul, or trull. (See Tooke.) G. Douglas renders spiracula—ane throll or ayn-ding stede; i.e. a hole or breathing place. The quotations sufficiently explain the usage.

The gouernour was all bedewed with drinke,
His truls and he were all layde downe to sleepe,
And we must shift, and of our selues must thinke
What meane was best.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Hollande, an. 1572.

I haue met with some of these trulles in London so disguised, that it hath passed my skill to discern whether they were men or women.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 7.

And all this pother for a common trull.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Fair Maid of the Inn, Act i.

The kings of Persia at their ordinary meals have their queens or espoused wives to sit by them at the board, but when they list to be merrie indeed, and carrouse lustily untill they be drunk, they send them away to their chambers, and call for their concubines, singing wenches, and musically truls in their place.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 261.

Though yet you no illustrious act have done,
To make the world distinguish Julia's son
From the vile offspring of a trull, who sits
By the town wall, and for a living knits.
Stepney. Juvenal, Sat. 8.

Of this great town, this wicked end
Is ripe for judgment; Satan's seat,
The sink of Sin, and Hell compleat.
In every street of trulls a troop.

TRUMPER. } The Dut. Tromp, trompet; Ger.
Tromp, trompette, trommètte; Ger. Drommetan or trompeten, to trumpet; Sw. Trumpet, are all (as well as the French, Italian, and Spanish,) from—A.S. Dreman, drym-an (to drum) to make a joyful noise, jubilare, (by the mere change of d into t);— applied first to the sound, noise, clamour of joy or rejoicing, of triumphing; (see TRIUMPH, and the quotation there from Spenser;))

And then to the instrument;
The drum—beaten; the trump or trumpet— blown. To trump—

To sound, to make a noise, a clangor, or clamour of rejoicing, or triumph, of congratula-tion;—of glory, vain glory;—to sound or make a noise.

To trump is also, at cards, (Fr. Triompher),—to throw down, to play, a conquering, victorious, triumphant card. (Fr. Triumpher; It. Triòfio; Sp. Triumfo.) See the quotations from Fox.
And hence—

To get the victory, to get the better, the advantage; to over-reach, to circumvent; and further—to contrive, to devise. (Fr. Tromper.)

To be put to his trumps,—i.e. to the necessity of playing the trump-card; (met.) making all exertions to conquer difficulties.

Than blew the trumpes fulle loud & fulle schille.

Fyrst to be drawn on an hyrdrell with trumpes and trumpettes through all the cite of Herford, and after, to be brought into the market place, where as all the people were assembled, and therefore to be tyed on hygh vpon a ladder that euery mā myght se hym.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 13.

The game that wee will play at, shall be called the triumph, which if it be well played at, hee that dealeth shall winne; the plaiers shall likewise winne, and the standers and lookers vpon, shall doe the same: insomuche that there is no man, that is willing to plaie at this triumphe with these cardes, but they shall bee all winners, and no losers.—Latimer. Ser. at Cambridge, (1529.)

Let therefore euerie christian man and woman plaie at these cardes, that they may haue and obtaine the triumph:
you must marke also that the triumph must applie to fetch home vnto him all the other cardes, whatsoever sute they be of.—Id. Ib.

It is a great ignominie and shame for a christian man to be bond and subiect vnto a Turke: nay it shall not be so, wee will first cast a trumpe in their waie, and plaie with them at cardes who shall haue the better, let vs plaie therfore on this fashion with this carde.—Id. Ib.

Now turne vp your trumpe, your hart, (hartes is trump as I saide before) and cast your trumpe your hart on this carde, and vpon this carde you shall learne what Christ requireth of a Christian man, not to be angrie, ne mooued to ire against his neighbour.—Id. Ib.

But sith she will the conquest challeng needs,
Let her accept me as her faithfull thrall;
That her great triumph, which my skill exceeds,
I may in trump of fame blaze over all.—Spenser, son. 29.

Burke. Speech on American Taxation.

TRUMPERY. Fr. Tromperie, impostura, tromper; Dut. Trompen, circumvenire, to impose upon, to circumvent; but this is clearly a consequential usage. (See TO TRUMP.) G. Douglas, in his prologue of the eyght booke, uses trumpes, a thing of little value; tenuis res, (Aeneidos, l. 5. v. 690,) the sobir trumpis, i.e. mean, inconsiderable goods, says the Glossarist.

Trompery,—any vain-glorious display; or any display of mere vanity; any worthless finery.

Have always with you the testimony of a good conscience, believing that Jesus of Nazareth was crucified for your sins, letting all other trash and trumpery go.
Styrie. Eccles. Mem. Mary, an. 1554.

And this man, say they, is a prophet of Mahomet, his arnes and legges naked, on his feet he did weare wooden pattens of two sorts, in his hand, a flagge, or streamer set

Trunk,—that from which the stem, stock, body, or bulk, from which boughs or limbs are cut or lopped off: generally, the stem, the main body.
Also (says Cotgrave),—the poor man's box in charities; i.e. a bulk or block, hollowed out (to receive alms; to serve as a boat); and then applied to a chest: and further, to the proboscis of the elephant, or other animal; to any thing formed like a stem, whether solid or hollow.

Trunchion,—a staff (with the branches cut off); a log, a club; a large thick piece.

To truncheon,—to use a truncheon; beat or strike with one.

He foineeth on his foo with a trunchoun,
And he him hurtleth with his hors adoun.

South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

A Christian always is indulged with an opportunity of escaping before he is brought to a trial, whatever may have been his offence; and if he is brought to a trial and convicted, he is seldom punished with death; while the poor Indians on the contrary are hanged, and broken upon the wheel, and even impaled alive without mercy.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 12.

When we speak of a state of trial, it must be remembered, that characters are not only tried, or proved or detected, but that they are generated also, and formed, by circumstances.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

Jesus, indeed, orders his followers to shake off the dust of their feet, where the inhabitants would not receive their doctrine, that they might not throw away their time in vain: but he never directed it as a trial-ordeal of innocence when they were accused of immoralities, and the honour of the mission concerned.—Warburton. Of Grace, b. ii. c. 12.

Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3560.

Pray for us; for, God willing, we will not leave you. We will go before you. You shall see in us that we preached no lyes, nor tales of tubs, but even the true word of God.

Coverdale. An Exhortation to the Cross, (1554.)

Here do I see a Cynick housed in his tub, scorning all wealth and state; and making still even with his victuals, and the day; who, when he was invited to supper to one of Alexander's great lords, could say; I had rather lick salt at Athens, then feast with Craterus.

Bp. Hall. Of Contention, § 16.

And few years hence, if anarchy goes on,
Jack Presbyter shall here erect his throne,
Knock out a tub with preaching once a day,
And every prayer be longer than a play.

Dryden. Prol. 10.

A philosopher who, in the austerity of his virtue, should condemn the art of pleasing as unworthy cultivation, would deserve little attention from mankind, and might be dismissed to his solitary tub, like his brother Diogenes.

Tuckt up even with the knees, with bow and arrows prest.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Shee also dofte her heavy haberieon,
Which the faire feature of her limbs did hyde;
And her well-plighted frock, which she did won
To tucke about her short when she did ryde, Shee low let fall.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

Her clothes tuckt to the knee, and dainty braided hair,
With bow and quiver arm'd, she wander'd here and there
Among the forest wild; Diana never knew Such pleasure, nor such harts as Mariana slew.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

After that he came to the crown, he caught one of the nobles, a great friend and companion of his brother Pantaloon, who had before-time been his adversary, and within a fullers mill so beclawed and mangled him with tuckers cards and burling combs, so as he died therewith.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 1003.

Diana. With horns and with hounds, I waken the day;
And hie to the woodland-walks away;
I tuck up my robe, and am buskin'd soon,
And tie to my forehead a waxing moon.
Dryden. The Secular Masque.

Pronp'd on his lance the pensive hero stood,
And heard, and saw unmov'd, the mourning crowd.
The fam'd physician tucks his robes around
With ready hands, and hastens to the wounds.

their waste and the edge of the petticoat, which keeps it close.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

'Twas a sad sight before they march'd from home,
To see our warriors in red wastecoats, some,
With hair tuck'd up, into our tiring room.
Dryden. Marriage a-la-Mode, Prol.

There is a certain female ornament by some called a tucker, and by others the neck-piece, being a slip of fine linen or muslin, that used to run in a small kind of ruffle round the uppermost verge of women's stays, and by that means covered a great part of the shoulders and bosom.

prey, or else companions for devils.
Hommond. Works, vol. iv. p. 614.

Both parties meet: they raise a doleful cry:
The matrons from the walls with shrieks reply:
And their mixt mournings rends the vaulted sky.
The town is fill'd with tumult and with tears,
Till the loud clamours reach Evander's ears.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xi.

Innumerable experiments shew, that heat, in the fire especially, is a positive quality, consisting in a tumultuary and vehement agitation of the minute parts of the body, that is said to be hot, and producing also in the bodies, that it is communicated to, a local motion, which is manifestly a positive thing.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 748.

But the injury being once owned by a retribution, and advanced by defiance, like an opposing torrent it tumultuates, grows higher and higher, begins to fix, and so by an improvement of the humour, that which at first was but a sudden motion, rises into a violent and from thence passes into a settled revenge.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

At once the cornet rattled in the skies;
At once tumultuous shouts and clamours rise.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xii.

The fierce Curetes too in arms advance,
And tread tumultuously their mystic dance:
And, lest the cries should reach old Saturne's ear,
Beat on their brazen shields the din of war.

Fr. Tonne, tonneau; It. Tina;
Sp. Tonel, tonelado; Dut.
Tonne; Ger. Tonne; Sw.
Tunna; A. S. Tunne. Skinner (followed by Wachter and others) derives from the Lat. Tina, and that from the Gr. Δεινος, a kind of vessel for wine, according to Hesychius. Tooke thinks tun, and its dim. tunnel, (A. S. Tænel, tenel), are the past part. of the verb tyn-an, to enclose, to encompass: and that the Lat. Tina is itself from tyn-an. (See Town.) Tun,—

Any inclosure; any package or bundle, a certain quantity or weight in one package; a certain measure of liquid inclosed in one vessel; the vessel holding such measure.

From Fabian (quoted by Tooke), tunne was a place to inclose or hold prisoners. In the Reprint, by Mr. Ellis, the word is towne, p. 400. "Certain persons of London brake up the tunne in the warde of Cornhill, and tooke oute certayne persons that hither were committed by Sir Ihon Briton, then custos or gardeyn of the citie."—Fabian. Edw. I. p. 142.

Tunnel,—any inclosure, inclosed way or passage; e. g. for smoke in its passage out; for liquor, in its passage into a tun or other vessel; a net, said to be shaped like a tunnel for liquids, wide at the mouth, and diminishing to a point. And, to tunnel, to make nets in this form, is used by Derham.

And ever sith hath so the tappe yronne,

The caracke being in burden by the estimation of the wise and experienced no lesse then 1600 tunnes had full 900 of those stowed with the grosse bulke of marchandise, the rest of the tunnage being allowed, partly to the ordinance, &c.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 198.

And before we came to his presence we went thorow a great chamber, where stood many small tunnes, pailles, bowles and pots of siluer.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 263.

Then when they please they make powder of it [tobacco], and then put it in one of the ends of the said cornet or pipe, and laying a cole of fire vpon it, at the other ende sucke it so long, that they fill their bodies full of smoke, till that it commeth out of their mouth and nostrils, euen as out of the tonnell of a chimney.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 224.

When the new wine is tunned: the dry huskes ar cast out.—Golden Boke, Let. 5.

It was a vault ybuilt for great dispenche,
With many raunges reard along the wall,
And one great chimney, whose long tonnell thence
The smoke forth threw.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

These mixtures of divers kinds are never good, but alwaies discordant: naught in old wines that come to our table, much worse then you may bee sure, in those that be new and not yet tused up.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

Let them passe along either through the concavities of an oxe shanke and maribone, or else an earthen pipe or tunnell made for the nonce.—Id. Ib. c. 21.

Lo! there th' unthankful swallow takes her rest,

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Luc. Why? for filling a bottle with a tunne-dish.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 2.

They hear that all things shall be order'd, all things regulated and settled; nothing written but what passes through the custom-house of certain publicans that haue the tunning and poundaging of all free-spoken truth.

Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

The ships employed herein are found by the king of Spain, who pays the officers and crews, and the tunnage is divided into a certain number of bales, all of the same size.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 10.

The Cyclops here their heavy hammers deal;
Loud strokes and hissings of tormented steel
Are heard around: the boiling waters roar;
And smoky flames through fuming tunnels soar.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. viii.

With what prodigious subtilty do some foreign birds not only plat and weave the fibrous parts of vegetables together, and curiously tunnel them, and commodiously form them into nests; but also artificially suspend them on the tender twigs of trees to keep them out of the reach of rapacious animals.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 13.

These little houses look coarse, and shew no great artifice outwardly; but are well tunnelled and made within with a hard tough paste.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 13.

And we took on board about fifteen tons of water, which we brought off in the country boats, at the rate of about three shillings per ton.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. iv. c. 11.

The route which it is made to take, in order that, and until that, it arrive at its destination, is more complex indeed and intricate, but, in the midst of complication and intricacy, as evident and certain, as is the apparatus of cocks, pipes, tunnels, for transferring the cider from one vessel to another.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

TU'NER.

TU'NING.

See TONE. Fr. Ton; It. Tuono; Sp. Tono; Lat. Tonus; Gr. Tovop, from τείν-ειν, intendere, (sc. vocem, sonum,) to stretch the voice.

An extension of sound, of continuous sounds, of sounds in harmony, or concert, or concert; an harmonious, a musical—continuity or succession of sound; (met.) harmony, concert, congruity; concord; a concord-ing or agreeing disposition, or arrangement, or temperament.

In the whiche swete soundes wee shall here so great plentie and diuersitie of tunes as euer was herde before, for sometime he speketh of God sometime of ye deuill sometye of holy angels, sometye of dampned spirites.

Fisher. Seuen Psalms, Ps. 38. pt. ii.

But now a while lett downe that haughtie string,
And to my tunes thy second tenor rayse,
That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

But nymphes and faeries by the bancks did sit
In the woods shade which did the waters crowne,
Keeping all noysome things away from it,
And to the waters fall tuning their accents fit.

Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 10.

Let the words be so set and couched, the affection so appeare, the countenance be so composed and the gesture so ordered, and the voice so tuned, that all concurring together may win credit to the speech, and be effectually to move.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 89.

Caius Gracchus the oratour, a man by nature blunt, rude in behaviour, and withall over-earnest and violent in his manner of pleading, had a little flute or pipe made for the nonce, such as musicians are wont to guide and rule the voice gently by little and little up and down, between base and treble, according to every note as they would themselves, teaching their scholars thereby to haue a tunable voice.—Id. Ib. p. 101.

[England] is commonly called by foreigners, [the ringing island] as having greater, more, and more tuneable bells than any one country in Christendom.

Fuller. Worthies. Berkshire.

In summer he [merle or blackbird] singeth cleare and tunably, in winter he stuteth and stammereth; but about the sun-stand in December, hee is mute and dumbe altogether.—Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 29.

The trembling streames which wont in chanel cleare
To romble gently downe with murmur soft,
And were by them right tunefull taught to beare
A bases part amongst their consorts oft.

Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

But when in hand my tunelesse harp I take,
Then do I more augment my foes despight;
And grieffe renew, and passions do awake
To battaile, fresh against myself to fight.—Id. Son. 44.

Our mournful Philomel,

That rarest tuner,

Henceforth in April

Shall wake the sooner.—Drayton. The Shepherd's Sirena.

— All organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire
Temper'd soft tinings, intermixt with voice Choral or unison.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Thus the blest gods the genial day prolong,
In feasts ambrosial, and celestial song.
Apollo tun'd the lyre; the Muses round
With voice alternate aid the silver sound.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

— The king observ'd alone
The silent tear, and heard the secret groan:
Then to the bard aloud: "O cease to sing,
Dumb be thy voice, and mute the tuneful string:"
To every note his tears responsive flow,
And his great heart heaves with tumultuous woe.

Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. viii.

If therefore the praises of God, tunefully performed, be naturally attended with an holy pleasure, that pleasure, I say, must needs produce attention; actuate all the springs, and enliven all the motions of devout and heavenly, nay even of earthly, and sluggish minds.

Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

If any one, in public speaking, shall have formed to himself a certain melody or tune, which require rest and pauses of its own, distinct from those of the sense, he has, undoubtedly, contracted one of the worst habits into which a public speaker can fall.—Blair, Lect. 33.

— Mean-time the shrill tun'd bell
Of some lone ewe that wanders from the rest
Tinkles far-off, with solitary sound.

Warton. Acis & Alcyon.

The screws revers'd (a task which if he please God in a moment executes with ease,)
Ten thousand thousand strings at once go loose,
Lost, till he tune them, all their pow'r and use.

Cowper. Retirement.

But chiefe the breeze, that murmurs through yon canes,
Enchants the ear with tunable delight.

Grainger. The Sugar-Cane, b. iii.

Their features were far from disagreeable, their eyes were lively, and their teeth even and white, their voices were soft and tunable, and they repeated many words after us with great facility.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 4.

How often have I led thy sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe, beside the murmur'ing Loire!
Where shading elms along the margin grew,
And freshen'd from the wave the zephyr flew.

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

TU'NICLE. } Fr. Tuniqué; It. Tònica; TU'NICK. } Sp. Tunica; Lat. Tunica; for

TU'NICATED. } which Vossius finds no etymology that he can approve. In the A. S. version of the Scriptures Tunece is of common occurrence. (see Lye.) but it may have been adopted from the Latin; though, as undoubtedly some roots of Latin words are to be found in our Northern language, it admits at least of conjecture that the A. S. Tyn-an, to inclose, to infold, to inwrap, may be the origin of the Lat. Tun-ica. See TOWN, TUN, TEN.

TUR

That which infolds or inwraps, or invests; a vest, a clothing, an integument, a covering.

Tunic of the eye,—a thin coat or covering of the eye.

Tunic, much lyke the vppermoste garment of the deacon.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 11.

The said medicine likewise is good for to extend and dilate the tunicles that make the ball or apple of the eye.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 18.

To him seven talents of pure ore I told,
Twelve cloaks, twelve vests, twelve tunics stiff with gold.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

The most common of these, which we observed, were two sorts of liliaceous roots, one simply tunicated, the other granulated upon its surface.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 3.

TU'NNEL. See TUN.

TU'NNY. Fr. Thon, thyn; It. Tønno; Sp. Tonina; Lat. Thynnus; Gr. Θυνος, from θύνειν, or θύνω, furere, either from its swiftness, or the fury with which it is said to be seized—sub caniculæ ortum.

The tunies are exceeding great fishes: we have seene some of them to weigh fifteen talents, and the taile to be two cuibts broad and a span.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 15.

The tunny was a fish well known to the ancients; it made a considerable branch of commerce; the time of its arrival into the Mediterranean from the ocean was observed, and stations for taking it established in places it most frequented; the eminences above the fishery were styled θυνοσκοπεια, and the watchmen that gave notice to those below of the motions of the fish, θυνοσκοποι.
Pennant. British Zoology. Tunny Mackrel.

TUP, n. } The common name for the ram in TUP, v. } the North. Tup, tupe, teap; perhaps top.

— An old blacke ram

Is tupping your white ewe.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

And while thy rams doe tup, thy ewes do twyn.
Doe thou in peacefull shade (from men's rude dyn)
Adde pinyons to thy fame.

Browne. To Master W. Browne.

TU'RBAN. } See Vossius de Vit. lib. ii. c. 18, TU'RBAN'D. } and Menage. Fr. Turban; It.
